

The Farmers' Column.

The Horse of All Work.

The inspired record speaks of man as "a little lower than the angels." Who comes next, is not mentioned, as I remember. I am ready with my opinion on the subject. The horse comes next to man, and more definitely, the horse of all work. Horses are known to have human diseases, very nearly, requiring like treatment. Nobody but the cannibals and some similar Frenchmen eat horse flesh, owing probably to conscious relationship. I claim your very "distinguished consideration" for the horse of all work.

He weighs from ten to twelve hundred. He is pony built; in other words well and evenly developed. He is docile, strong, and hardy. He is any color that happens, but, in the good time coming, he will shed his mongrel coat, and appear in jet black, chestnut, or blood bay; breeders will learn not to mix colors, but secure "fixity of type" in that, as well as other respects.

The horse of all work can go as fast as gentlemen drive—say ten miles an hour. That speed should never be required of him on a full stomach, grass diet, or a poor feed. His forte is endurance, not speed. He is eminently practical. He has talent, not genius. He is ready to do anything and everything, that needs to be done. He keeps easy, and lives longer, and has fewer ailments than the fleet racer or the huge draft horse. The horse that I have described is about the only horse that is needed in this American republic. He may, like imported Messenger, Patchen, or Green Mountain Morgan, have speed as well as strength. The horse for "long distances" must be a horse with power to draw a load. It is eminently proper to cultivate speed, so far as it can be done without sacrificing strength and endurance. A horse that can trot twenty miles within an hour, as "John Stewart," a Philadelphia horse, and some others have done, can trot ten miles with ease, and without much liability to injure. A horse with a good constitution, good size, and proportions, capable of drawing a plow, or a heavy load over muddy roads, is all the better for being fast. If breeders were not blunderers, that description of horses would now be common. But these have committed the grave mistake, the unpardonable crime, of fritting away indispensable qualities, strength and stamina, for the sake of gaining ten seconds on a mile heat! Gentlemen of the turf ought to know that there is no credit attached to that kind of business. Had they always 'bat' on going further, with greater weight, betting would have done good service in one direction, however demoralizing in its general tendency. The horse that wins, and gets into the papers, is the horse the public run after, and breed from without discriminating inquiry as to his substantial merits. Thus the spindle-shanked, short-winded high-flyers, that can't carry much on their backs, and break down on a "four-mile heat," win great sums of money, on short distances, sell for fabulous prices, are hung up in drawing-rooms, and bar-rooms, and are pictured along with Colfax and Grant in the Illustrated News.

The result we see to-day. One-half of the horses of America would sell for twice their present price if they were 250 pounds heavier. Farmers ought to see that it is easy enough to fritter away the size and strength of their horses, but every way difficult and uncommon to attain first class speed—the one they have accomplished, the other they almost universally fail to reach. Running from one extreme to another, committing a blunder to repair a blunder, they next cross with a ponderous draft-horse, rarely serviceable, making an incongruous union with small light-boned breeds. Thus we have all sizes, colors and shapes, conglomerate and chaotic. From this mixture of races we can breed with no certainty, either as to size or quality.

I am thoroughly convinced that there is one model of a horse that about every American breeder should pattern after and reproduce. There is but little use in this country for any other kind. Doctor, lawyer, merchant, minister, farmer, all want a docile, compact, symmetrical, hardy animal, weighing from ten to twelve hundred. Such horses do farm work profitably. If the work is too heavy for two use three. Farmers make a great mistake if they do not provide themselves with three-horse plows, harrows, and wagons; thus the same driver can accomplish a third more in the same time.

Three thousand three hundred pounds of horse material, if done up in three parcels, is far more available than in two. You can then rake hay while you are drawing it in, and if persistently besieged, spare your wife the odd horse to go to the Sewing Society with. An eleven hundred horse, properly made up, answers well for the farmer, and is about right for the professional man, who often has long drives over bad roads. It is shameful that we should resort to such frail buggies, and trashy cutters, and we need not do it, if our steeds have substance. The professional man wants a gay, lively horse, and when he gets a little past his prime, a small farmer will pay a fair price for him, if he has size. Farmers will frequently buy that kind of a horse, even if a little stiffened, it is therefore safer property than such as are too light for a lumber wagon or a plow. Let breeders, then, as a general rule, aim to produce horses weighing eleven hundred pounds; compact, muscular, and as fast as you can get them. But never sacrifice strength, size and endurance, to secure extraordinary speed.

Setting up such a horse as the universal standard, there will unavoidably, be sufficient diversity in size, speed, and characteristics to answer the requirements of those who fancy something a little above or below the standard. If the general public would aim at one thing, and discreetly pursue their aim, we should soon weed out the miserable trash that disgraces and damages the noblest department of stock growing. But so long as some breed small, others large; some fine and fleet, others coarse and slow, and then mix all their kinds promiscuously together; so long shall we be afflicted with ungainly, inefficient, and unprofitable horses.—Western Stock Journal.

THE LAST MILESTONES.

BY "PEARL RIVERS."

Sixty years through shine and shadow,
Sixty years, my gentle wife,
You and I have walked together
Down the rugged road of life.
From the hills of spring we started,
And through all the summer land,
And the fruitful autumn country
We have journeyed hand in hand.

We have borne the heat and burden,
Toiling painfully and slow;
We have gathered in our harvest
With rejoicing long ago.
Leave the uplands for our children,
They are strong to sow and reap,
Through the quiet winter lowlands
Our level way we keep.

'Tis a dreary country, darling,
You and I are passing through;
But the road lies straight before us,
And the miles are short and few;
No more dangers to encounter—
No more hills to climb, true friend;
Nothing now but simply walking
Till we reach our journey's end.

We have had our time of gladness;
'Twas a proud and happy day,
Ah! the proudest of our journey,
When we felt that we could say,
Of the children God hath given,
Looking fondly on the ten,
"Lovely women are our daughters—
Our sons are noble men!"

We have had our time of sorrow—
Our time of anxious fears,
When we could not see the milestones
Through the blindness of our tears.
In the sunny summer country,
Far behind us, little May
And Willie, too, grew weary,
And we left them on the way.

Are you looking backward, mother,
That you stumble in the snow?
I am still your guide and staff, dear,
Lean your weight upon me, so!
Our road is growing narrow;
And what is it, wife, you say?
Yes! I know our eyes are dim, dear,
But we have not lost the way.

Cheer thee! cheer thee! faithful hearted!
Just a little way before
Lies the great Eternal City
Of the King that we adore.
I can see the shining spires,
And the King, the King, my dear,
We have served him long and humbly;
He will bless us, do not fear.

Ah! the snow falls fast and heavy,
How you shiver with the cold!
Let me wrap your mantle closer,
And my arm around you fold.
We are weak, and faint, and weary,
And the sun low in the West;
We have reached the gates, my darling,
Let us tarry here and rest.

The Dagger of Cortez.

It may interest some of our readers to learn that the dagger of this celebrated conqueror of Mexico is still in existence. This deadly weapon is of a peculiar construction, the handle being of open filigree work in steel pendent ornaments within it. The cross-bar, like the rest of the instrument, is of polished steel, finished with a crown at either end; and above this is an oblong structure, four inches in length containing a piece of mechanism by which on being pressed the blade was opened when it entered the wound. The blade, properly so called, springing from this, is eight inches long, and opens like a pair of scissors. When thus opened in the wound a liquid poison, previously placed in a deep groove, running down the centre of the blade, would be emitted, causing certain death. This dagger, which is well authenticated, descended from an ancient Mexican family to the Bishop of Mobile, North America, who deposited it in the Museum of the University of St. Louis, North America, where it remained sixteen years, when it came into the possession of the present owner, a gentleman, residing at Aldershott, who was recently good enough to grant me the loan of it for a short time, for the inspection of some antiquarian friends. I may add that no other dagger of similar construction is at present known to be in existence.

Don't Bribe Your Own Judge.

A man's mind is a court, and his passions are all of them tricky lawyers. In ordinary times you cannot go into any court, and hear the statements of the counsel, without feeling that there is a great deal of ingenuity exerted to cover up some things, and unduly magnify other things so as to make out the best possible case for the side whose interest it is the desire of the special pleaders to advance. But there sits the old, stupid judge, stupid because he will be just, and he puts the lawyer right on that side, and holds everything to the law and to the fact, that he may come to justice, at least in theory.—every man has a judge within him, his conscience; and there are many men whose consciences have been bribed, and when they are presiding over the court which is constantly held in the heart, they are all the while excusing themselves for giving their adherence to things that are wrong. And this happens, not once, nor twice, nor thrice, but scores of times, in the experience of men; and they need to be reminded that, in every case, appeal is made to a court where righteous judgments are declared; they need to get such visions of the Judgment Day that they shall hold their breath, that their consciences shall not dare to be bribed, and and that they shall look at everything in the light of eternal justice.
