

The Farmers' Column.

Clover as a Renovator.

It is a fact well known to all agriculturists that clover is among the best of all plants for renovating worn out soils. Why it is better than the grasses, or buckwheat, or any plant that grows rapidly, furnishing in a comparatively short time a large amount of organic matter to return to the soil, is not so generally known.

Some not well acquainted with the laws of vegetable physiology have supposed it was because clover takes directly from the atmosphere a larger proportion of its food than most other plants, and hence less from the soil; in this way not only exhausting the soil less of its plant food, but in reality bringing from the atmosphere an increased amount of food, which is changed by the plant into organic matter, and by it deposited in the soil.

Were it known that clover does feed upon the atmosphere more, this theory would appear quite plausible. It is a well-established fact that plants in general take most of their food from the atmosphere. This has been well shown by M. Ville, a French agricultural chemist, in some experiments conducted for the purpose of ascertaining to what degree of perfection plants can be brought when grown under such conditions that they could get no food from the soil. He found that corn grown in powdered brick dust (which certainly could contain no matter in a condition to be taken up by the roots of the plant), and watered with distilled water, grew sufficiently well to ripen some of its seed, although not developing into nearly as strong a plant as when grown in ordinary soil. Now, while it is well known that the larger proportion of the food which builds up the organic portion of the plant, is derived from the atmosphere it is not known what proportion, neither is the relative proportion taken from this source by different plants known.

With the organic constituents, the ash of the plant, our knowledge is more definite. This can be obtained from no other source than the soil. It is the amount of these soluble inorganic constituents taken from the soil that indicates, other conditions being the same, the exhaustive effects of any crop. For these are substances that are essential to healthy plant growth, yet are always present in small quantities.

A comparison, then, of the inorganic constituents of plants, will furnish the data from which conclusions of the absolute exhaustive effect may be drawn. Comparing red clover with common meadow hay, the number of parts of inorganic matter in 1,000 pounds of meadow hay removes from the soil 10.6 pounds more inorganic plant-food than the same quantity of clover.

The per cent. of earthly constituents of the ash in each case is as follows:

	Meadow Hay.	Red Clover.
Potash,	25.9	33.5
Soda,	7.0	1.6
Magnesia,	4.0	12.6
Lime,	11.6	34.0
Phosphoric Acid,	2.6	9.0
Sulphuric Acid,	5.1	3.0
Silicia,	29.6	2.7
Chlorine,	7.0	3.7

Or 1,000 pounds of these crops would take the following amounts of each substance from the soil:

	Meadow Hay. Lbs.	Red Clover. Lbs.
Potash,	19.0	24.2
Soda,	5.4	1.1
Magnesia,	8.8	8.2
Lime,	8.8	22.8
Phosphoric Acid,	4.8	6.7
Sulphuric Acid,	22.02	1.8
Chlorine,	6.2	2.5

Of these substances the silicia is of the least value, because it is always present in soils in large quantities. If we deduct the silicia from the amount of all these substances, there remains of the clover ash 56.5 lbs.; of the ash of meadow hay 52.9 lbs. Here it is seen that 1,000 lbs. of clover remove from the soil 13.6 lbs. more of the most valuable constituents (those present in smallest quantities) of the mineral food of plants, than does common meadow hay. The two most valuable of all these constituents are the phosphoric acid and the potash. Of both these the clover contains the most. Hence, were we to judge of the exhaustive effects of these crops by the food taken by each, clover would necessarily be placed first. Yet universal experience shows the reverse to be true. We must seek, then, from some other source the cause of this apparent anomaly. This cause is found in the manner in which each plant feeds upon the soil.

Common meadow grasses feed near the surface of the soil almost exclusively. They have a large mass of fibrous roots that extend into the earth but a short distance, consequently their food must all lie near the surface. Clover, on the contrary, is a deep feeder, sending its roots often to the depth of many feet. It thus gets food that is entirely beyond the reach of the grasses, and may grow well upon a soil which to them is nearly barren.

The weight of roots in comparison with that of the tops, is also much greater in the clover than in the grasses. It has been estimated that at the end of three years after seeding, the weight of the dried roots of clover will be equal to half the weight of dried tops that has been removed as hay. That is, if four tons of hay have been cut, two tons of organic matter will be contained in the roots. Whenever the clover sward is plowed under, this two tons of matter decays, and acts as so much manure in the soil.

Another benefit that clover imparts to land is that the entire soil is permeated by the roots to the depth of several feet, and as these roots decay they furnish passages by which the air may reach the soil to a depth that otherwise would be impossible. By this means the soil becomes more finely divided, the insoluble plant-food is changed by the carbonic acid of the atmosphere to the soluble form, and the fertility of the land is indirectly increased. We conclude, then, that the beneficial effects of clover as a renovator of worn-out soil does not depend upon where the plant feeds, but upon how it feeds.—Western Farmer.

INCONSTANT.

[The name of the woman, (if woman it was,) who wrote the following, should not be allowed to pass into oblivion. It will strike a chord in many a heart:]

INCONSTANT.

Inconstant! Oh, my God!
Inconstant! When a single thought of thee
Sends all my shivering blood
Back on my heart in thrills of ecstacy!

Inconstant! When to sleep
And dream that thou art near me, is to learn,
So much of heaven, I weep
Because the earth and morning must return.

Inconstant! Ah! too true!
Turned from the rightful shelter of thy breast,
My tired heart flutters through
The changeful world—a bird without a nest.

Inconstant to the crowd
Through which I pass, as, to the skies above,
The fickle summer cloud,
But not to thee, Oh, not to thee, dear love!

I may be false to all
On earth beside, and every tender tie
Which seems to hold in thrall
The weary life of mine, may be a lie.

But true as God's own truth,
My steadfast heart turns backward evermore,
To that sweet time of youth
Whose golden tide beats such a barren shore!

Inconstant! Not my own
The hand which builds this wall between our lives;
On its cold shadow, grown
To perfect shape, the flower of love survives.

God knows that I would give
All other joys, the sweetest and the best,
For one short hour to live
Close to my heart, its comfort and its rest.

But life is not all dark;
The sunlight gladdens many a hidden slope,
The dove shall find its ark
Of peaceful refuge and of patient hope.

I yet shall be possessed
Of woman's meed—my small world set apart!
Home, love, protection, rest,
And children's voices singing through my heart.

By God's help, I will be
A faithful mother and a tender wife;
Perhaps even more; for He
Has chastened the best glory of my life.

But sacred to his loss,
One white sweet chamber of my heart shall be,
No foot shall ever cross
The silent portal sealed to love and thee.

And sometimes when my lips
Are to my first-born's clinging, close and long,
Draining with bee-like sips
And its sweet lily heart, will it be wrong—

If, for an instant, wild
With precious pain, I put the truth aside,
And dream it is thy child
That I am fondling with such tender pride?

And when another's head
Sleeps on thy heart, if it should ever seem
To be my own instead,
Oh, darling, hold it closer for the dream.

God will forgive the sin,
If sin it is, our lives are swept so dry,
So cold, so passion-clear,
Thank Him death comes at last—and so good-bye.

Charcoal for Horses' Wind.

Many years ago, I recollect a horse being brought into the yard of Joseph Bignal, a celebrated man for keeping hunters, at Croyden. The horse was very much affected in the wind, and could hardly move from distress. In a very few days this animal did its regular work as a hunter, with perfect ease and comfort to itself. Tar water was the cure. Tar is carbon, and charcoal is also carbon; charcoal in the powder is more easily given than tar water. I have tried it with most beneficial effect; and I think it stands to reason that the removal of noxious gases and flatulence from the stomach of the horse must improve his wind and condition.—Tar is frequently given with benefit in cases of chronic disease of the respiratory organs; but its effect are totally different from those produced by charcoal (carbon.)—London Field.

When Daniel Webster was Secretary of State, Signor Blitz called on him in Washington, when the following dialogue took place:

"What has brought you to Washington?"

"I have come for an office, sir."

"An office! What office is there under the Government of the United States for a magician?"

"To count the money in the Treasury. I should like you to take one hundred thousand dollars of Treasury notes and count them carefully. I will count them also, when it will appear that there are only seventy-five thousand dollars."

"Ah! Signor," said Mr. Webster, "that won't do. We have magicians in Washington who, if a hundred thousand dollars were to pass through their hands, would leave nothing of it."

Whenever a Radical becomes in very bad odor, and wants to secure a good fat office he generally tries the good and pious dodge. Thus Gov. Bullock, of Georgia, who is out for United States Senator, "wants to be an angel and with the angels stand." A desire with which the good people of Georgia cordially unite—anywhere, so he puts himself outside of the State.

LORILLARD'S "EUREKA," Smoking Tobacco is an excellent article of granulated Virginia; wherever introduced it is universally admired. It is put up in handsome muslin bags, in which orders for Meerschaum Pipes are daily packed.

LORILLARD'S Yacht Club Smoking Tobacco classed by all who consume it as the "finest of all;" it is made of the choicest leaf grown; it is anti-nervous in its effects, as the Nicotine has been extracted; it leaves no disagreeable taste after smoking; it is very mild, light in color and weight, hence one pound will last as long as 3 of ordinary tobacco. In this brand we also pack orders every day for first quality Meerschaum Pipes. Try it and convince yourself it is all it claims to be, "THE FINEST OF ALL."

LORILLARD'S CENTURY Chewing Tobacco This brand of Fine Cut chewing tobacco has no equal or superior anywhere. It is without doubt the best chewing tobacco in the country.

LORILLARD'S SNUFFS have now been in general use in the United States over 110 years, and still acknowledged "the best" wherever used.

If your storekeeper does not have these articles for sale, ask him to get them; they are sold by respectable jobbers almost everywhere.
