Hints on Poultry Breeding.

The best nest boxes are those that hide the hens from sight when we are passing near them. This rule applies to our common breeds much more than to the large Asiatic fowl, the latter being more domestic in their habits, and not easily frightened from their nests.

It has been recommended by experienced breeders, to construct the boxes, so as to admit the fowls on the back sides, and have lids hung on hinges on the top of the tier, to be raised up to examine the nest. This plan has its advantages and disadvantages. It affords a quiet retreat for the fowls, but does not allow the breeder to see at a glance whether all is right therein, as he should be able to see, when his hens are incubating. It sometimes happens that two fowls crowd into one nest by mistake, and if it be the nest of a sitting hen, serious results often happen in the destruction of eggs, as I have before stated. Again, it is a question whether permanent or moveable boxes are best. I use both kinds, but give the preference to the latter—the moveable ones. For the large breeds, I construct them fifteen inches in diameter, each way, and from eight to twelve inches high, with the fronts sawed out obliquely from each upper corner, towards the centre, down within six inches of the bottom; thus affording ingress without obliging the hens to hop down, which our large breeds cannot do without danger of breaking the eggs. Furthermore, some of them cannot get into a nest one foot high, without considerable effort at flying up, when a common, native hen, would hop up with the greatest ease.

For our common, native hens, I make the boxes about one foot square, both in diameter and height.

I place my boxes six to eight feet apart, but one must have a commodious fowl house to allow so much space, if he keeps a large number of fowls. I have several yards and houses, one for each breed.

The general rule is to allow about ten hens to one cock, yet more hens may sometimes be allowed with safety, when we are not particularly anxious that every egg should be impregnated. In breeding very valuable fowls, fewer pullets to each male, is the safer way. I have at present four Brahma Pootra (I generally call them Brahma fowls, for convenience, and I find that the public prefer this shorter name,) roosters to twenty pullets, but I find them rather too amorous, and I shall have to take away one or two of them.

The duration of impregnation is a very important question to the breeder, and as it is not always convenient to keep each breed separate in the fall and winter, when the hens are not laying, the question is, how long can we allow our fowls to run together promiscuously in the non-breeding season, with safety?

It is the opinion of many experienced breeders, that an impregnation lasts no longer than during the period of laying one single litter of eggs, and that if a hen be removed at the expiration of laying her litter, and placed with a cock of her own pure blood, that the chicks produced thereafter will have no impure trace, though the hen previously ran with an impure cock. I do not admit that this is true, but I am convinced that some traces of impurity will extend to the second and third litter after that laid from connection with an impure blooded cock.

The best way is, undoubtedly, to be able to keep the different breeds distinct and separate the entire year; but when this is not done, they must be separated before any manifestations of intimacy between cocks and pullets takes place.

A dunghill fowl will live, with good care, in some cases, from ten to fifteen years; but we should not allow them to live beyond the third or fourth year, unless it be some valuable breed, that may still be of service to us. A hen is in her prime the first and second years. They are better layers the first year after maturity, and better sitters thereafter, as a general rule. In keeping our common varieties, it is best to keep none over three years from the egg.

It is the opinion of many people that hens will not lay as many eggs in a season when no cock is allowed to run with them, but this is not so. I kept two hundred hens, some years ago, during one year, without any cocks, as an experiment, and I found no difference in the number of eggs produced at all, nor in the desire of the hens to incubate. It is said that eggs produced without impregnation, will keep good much longer than those that are impregnated. This subject is worthy the consideration of those who furnish eggs in large quantities.

Perhaps no subject is more veiled in uncertainty, and in an absence of any method or recipe that can be relied on, than the preservation of eggs the entire year, so that they shall be equally good as those fresh laid.

Many recipes are given from year to year, that claim to be effectual in producing such a result, but it is not in the power of man to preserve an egg, even six months, and have the same fine, fresh flavor, that a new laid egg possesses. This I consider a settled point, and the question then arises, what is the best way to preserve eggs the longest possible time, and have them in a good condition for use?

—:o:—

PROFIT OF HENS.—At a recent meeting of the American Institute Farmers' Club, several interesting letters were read from poultry fanciers who submitted the results of their efforts in rearing poultry and eggs during the past year. In one instance each hen was reported to yield $4.20 per annum. In some other instances the average yield was $3.69 to $3.79 each.

—:o:—

BRAHMAS.—This breed is generally admitted to be the very best for general purposes They possess both size and beauty, are very prolific and the best winter layers known.

Don't Drink To-Night.

I left my mother in the door,
My sister by her side;
Their clasped hands and loving looks
Forbade their doubts to hide;
I left and met with comrades gay,
When the moon brought out her light,
And my loving mother whispered me,
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

Long years have rolled away since then;
My jetty curls are gray;
But, oh! those words are with me yet,
And will not pass away.
I see my mother's loving face,
With goodness radiant, bright,
And hear her words rising in mine ears,
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

My mother is now resting sweet
In the graveyard on the hill,
But mother's words come back to me
And haunt my memory still.
I've often, often passed the cup;
Oh! then my heart was right,
Because I heard the warning words,
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

I've now passed down the road of life,
And soon my race is run,
A mother's warning listened to
An immortal crown is won.
Oh, mothers, with your blessed smile,
Look on your boys so bright,
And say, as you alone can say,
"My boy, don't drink to-night."

These words will prove a warning when
In the thorny paths of life,
Thy boy is in the tempter's wiles,
And warring in the strife.
These words will stop the morning cup,
And the revelry at night,
By whispering back a mother's voice,
"Don't drink, my boy, to-night."

Christopher Columbo.

The following is from Mark Twain's "New Pilgrim's Progress:"

The party amused themselves, and nearly drove the guide crazy, at Genoa, by pretending utter stupidity and indifference to any wonders he had to show. The guides in Genoa are delighted to secure the American party, because Americans so much wonder and deal so much in sentiment and emotion, before any relic of Columbus. Our guide there fidgeted about as if he had swallowed a spring mattress. He was full of animation—full of impatience. He said:

"Come wis me, genteelmen—come! I show you ze letter writing by Christopher Colombo!—write it himself!—write it wis his own hand!—come."

He took us to the municipal palace. After much impressive fumbling of keys and opening of locks, the stained and aged document was spread before us. The guide's eyes sparkled. He danced about us, and touched the parchment with his finger.

"What I tell you, genteelmen? Is it not so? See! handwriting of Christopher Colombo!—write it himself!"

We looked indifferent, unconcerned. The doctor examined the document very deliberately, during a painful pause. Then he said, without any show of interest:

"Ah—Ferguson—what—what did you say was the name of the party who wrote this?"

"Christopher Colombo. Ze great Christopher Colombo!"

Another deliberate examination.

"Ah—did he write it himself, or—or how?"

"He write it himself!—Christopher Colombo!—he's own handwriting, by himself!"

"Why, I have seen boys in America, only fourteen years old, that could write better than that."

"But zis is ze great Christo—"

"I don't care who it is! It's the worst writing I ever saw. Now, you must not think you can impose upon us because we are strangers. We are no fools by a good deal. If you have got any specimens of penmanship of real merit, trot them out, and if you haven't drive on!"

We drove on. The guide was considerably shaken up, but he made one more venture. He had something which he thought would overcome us. He said:

"Ah, genteelmen, you come wis me! I show you beautiful, O magnificent bust of Christopher Colombo! Splendid, grand, magnificent."

He brought us before the beautiful bust—for it was beautiful—and sprang back and struck an attitude:

"Ah, look—Christopher Colombo!—beautiful bust—beautiful pedestal!"

The doctor put up his eye-glass, procured for such occasions:

"Ah, what did you say this gentleman's name was?"

"Christopher Colombo!—ze great Christopher Colombo."

"Christopher Colombo—the great Christopher Colombo. Well, what did he do?"

"Discover America—discover America. O, ze devil."

"Discover America? No, that statement will hardly wash. We are just from America ourselves. We know nothing about it. Christopher Colombo—pleasant name. Is—is he dead?"

"Oh, copo di Baccho!—three hundred years!"

"What did he die of?"

"I do not know—I cannot tell."

"Smallpox, think?"

"I do not know, genteelmen. I do not know what he died of."

"Measles, likely?"

"May be—may be—I do not know; I think he died of something."

"Parents living?"

"Im-pos-see-ble."

"Ah—which is the bust and which is the pedestal?"

"Santa Marie!—zis ze bust!—zis ze pedestal!"

"Ah—I see, I see—happy combination, very happy combination indeed Is this the first time the gentleman was ever on a bust?"

THE penalty for walking on a railroad track in England is £10, said one while discussing fatal accidents on railroads. "Pooh!" replied Uncle Jerry, "is that all? The penalty in this country is death."

LORILLARD'S "EUREKA," Smoking Tobacco is an excellent article of granulated Virginia; wherever introduced it is universally admired. It is put up in handsome muslin bags, in which orders for Meerschaum Pipes are daily packed.

LORILLARD'S Yacht Club Smoking Tobacco classed by all who consume it as the "finest of all;" it is made of the choicest leaf grown; it is anti-nervous in its effects, as the Nicotine has been extracted; it leaves no disagreable taste after smoking; it is very mild, light in color and weight, hence one pound will last as long as 3 of ordinary tobacco. In this brand we also pack orders every day for first quality Meerschaum Pipes. Try it and convince yourself it is all it claims to be, "THE FINEST OF ALL."

LORILLARD'S CENTURY Chewing Tobacco This brand of Fine Cut chewing tobacco has no equal or superior anywhere. It is without doubt the best chewing tobacco in the country.

LORILLARD'S SNUFFS have now been in general use in the United States over 110 years, and still acknowledged "the best" wherever used.

If your storekeeper does not have these articles for sale, ask him to get them; they are sold by respectable jobbers almost everywhere.
