

The Farmers' Column.

Cranberries upon Upland.

Dr. Thurber, of the American Agriculturist, has done the fair thing towards the Long Island growers of upland cranberries. He was rather incredulous on the subject in his September number, but at the same time he expressed himself as open to conviction, and to this end promised to bring willing eyes to look upon the proof, if proof could be produced. So the pioneer in the business took up the glove thus cast at his feet, and, in behalf of himself and his contemporaries, asked the doubting doctor to come and see. The invitation was of course very freely accepted; the doctor went and saw, and was conquered, and now, as we have said, he has made the amende honorable, and will print it in his forthcoming issue. We have been favored with an advance page of the same, and gladly avail ourselves of the information it contains, the more so as there has been from time to time considerable inquiry in regard to the matter, and this is the most complete and reliable statement of the facts yet placed before the public.

The plantations visited are located in the vicinity of North Islip, a little railway station distant some two hours from New York city. The country thereabout is very similar in appearance to a large portion of Southern Jersey. There is the same flat surface, the same scraggy growth of stunted pines and scrub oaks. The soil is sandy; at a depth of from one to four feet is a hard pan of closely packed gravel of variable thickness, and below this is pure sand as far down as any excavations have penetrated. The soil, like that with which we have compared it, is not quite so poor as it appears, and after a liberal application of fertilizers, responds readily to cultivation in fair farm crops. But the idea of attempting to grow cranberries in such a location, where there is no sign of the muck in which the creepers love to send their rootlets, where there are no facilities for flowing, was certainly a novel one; but it came to Mr. Thomas E. Bridger once upon a time, and he tried the experiment. He cleared an acre or so of the dry land we have described, leaving it smooth and mellow as a garden, and then planted upon it the vines he had searched for and secured in a distant swamp. It is natural to suppose that his neighbors shrugged their shoulders and smiled at his folly; but the season advanced, the tiny creepers lived and grew apace. Later we find these same neighbors repeating the indiscretion, and they kept on repeating it until now—some five or six years after—there are, within the circuit of a mile, perhaps 20 or 30 acres devoted to the crop, and more of the barrens are being put in order for the same purpose.

The berries thus produced, though smaller and considerably less in quantity, are higher colored than most of those grown upon wet land, and they are claimed to be heavier. They are certainly of high repute with the city dealer. The yield of an acre in full bearing averages about thirty barrels, ranging in price, according to the season, from $12 to $22. It is estimated that one man might properly care for five acres, and still leave intervals for other occupation. In the vicinity of other plantations referred to, cranberry fields can be established at a cost of about $100 per acre, including the original price of the land.

We question, however, if it would be worth while for our friends in Southern Jersey to place hopes upon their upland so long as such areas of cedar bottom remain unappropriated. But for persons in other sections of the country, who have similar light soil, it might be wisdom to give some attention to the subject. But even they should make haste slowly, as it remains to be discovered how much of the success at North Islip is due to some possible peculiarity of the soil, and how much to the influence of the sea, which thunders up the beach five miles away.

For such, however, as may care to make the attempt to grow their own cranberries we give a somewhat explicit account of the modus operandi of preparation and subsequent care.

The land is first cleared and thoroughly grubbed to remove all natural vegetation. The refuse thus secured is taken off and burned elsewhere, as it is found, if burned upon the ground, the ashes favor the incoming of weeds. Then the plough is introduced, and the harrow, and sometimes the hand-rake. Shallow furrows, three or four feet apart, are opened, and in them the plants are set either in hills or drills, as may be preferred. The spaces between the rows are worked with the cultivator as often as necessary to keep out foreign growth, and the rows themselves must be hand-weeded with as much care as a crop of onions or carrots. The vines will become well established and make considerable growth the first season. A few scattered berries are produced the second year. The third year the rows of vines become wider, and the intervening spaces narrowed, but the same order of cultivation is maintained, and a small yield of fruit is secured. The bed is usually in full bearing the fifth year, the ground being covered with a mat of plants, save in the narrow footpaths between the rows, which are kept free by clipping in the runners. Very much depends upon thorough weeding. In the neighborhood in question there are plantations in various stages of neglect, some of them almost hopelessly ruined, the owners not having given them the needed attention at the proper time. It is only fair, however, to state that those who showed this poor husbandry are not real sons of the soil, but city men or mechanics, whose outside occupations contract their powers.

How to Keep Butter Sweet.—It is the easiest thing in the world. Simply put in clean jars, and cover with a strong brine, This will keep pure butter a year, fresh and sweet, as we know by experience. It is almost equally good to put in oak casks, headed tight. This is equivalent to canning fruit. The brine, in case of jars, acts as a heading, keeping the air out.

SONG OF THE DUCKS.

One little black duck, one little gray,
Six little white ducks running out to play;
One white lady-duck, motherly and trim,
Eight little baby-ducks bound for a swim.

One little white duck holding up its wings,
One little bobbing duck making water rings,
One little black duck turning round its head,
One big black duck—guess he's gone to bed.

One little white duck running from the water,
One very fat duck—pretty little daughter!
One very grave duck swimming off alone,
One little white duck standing on a stone.

One little white duck walking by its mother,
Look among the water-reeds, may be there's another,
Not another anywhere? Surely you are blind.
Push away the grass, dear, ducks are hard to find.

Bright, little brown eyes, o'er the picture linger;
Point me all the ducks out, chubby little finger;
Make the picture musical, merry little shout!
Now, where's that other duck? What is he about?

I think the other duck's the nicest duck of all,
He hasn't any feathers, and his mouth is sweet and small!
He runs with a light step and jumps upon my knee,
And though he cannot swim, he is very dear to me.

One little lady-duck, motherly and trim;
Eight little baby-ducks bound for a swim;
One lazy black duck taking quite a nap;
One little precious duck, here on mamma's lap.

After the Funeral.

Of all the returnings home, the return from the grave after the funeral is the most intensely sad. Who that has ever followed the dearly beloved to his last rest will not agree that it is even so?

While the lost one was sick, we went in and out, anxious, sorrowing, fearful. The solicitude to relieve and care for him engrossed us—the apprehension of losing him excited and agonized us, but there was no room nor time for loneliness or sense of present desolation.

While he lay dead beneath the home roof, there was hurry and bustle in preparation for the final rites. Friends must be apprised and invited—the funeral arrangements definitely made—the hospitalities of the house must befit the occasion; all is excitement and tension—the loss is not yet felt.

But when the coach drops us at our door, "after the funeral," then it is that the work of the destroyer begins to be apparent—the very house seems lone, and still, and sepulchral, though it be in the heart of the town; and though its threshold be thronged with friendly feet, it seems empty and void! The apartments, oh how deserted—especially the room where he fought and surrendered in the awful conflict! Here, there, everywhere are memories of him! How they make the tears start now, though we have often contemplated them calmly ever since he died. Those are his clothes—how painfully distinct is our recollection of how he looked in every one of them, and when and where he last wore them. These are his books—the one he last read with the leaf turned down where his place was. There is his chair in the fireside corner, where he loved to sit. There his ever vacant seat at the family board. During the sickness, we had not so much noticed these—we hoped ever that he might use or occupy them again; now we know it cannot be, and this shows us the dreadful vacuity everywhere.

Oh, how dark and dismal came down the first night shadows "after the funeral!" No night was ever so dreary or so long—the tickings of the clock reverberated like bell strokes—such deep silence—no footsteps now on the stairs, or overhead in the sick chamber—no nurse and watchers to come and say, "he is not so well, and asks for you"—no, indeed—you may sleep on now and take your rest if you can!

Poor, bereaved heart! it will be long before the sweet rest you once knew will revisit your couch. Slumber will bring again the scenes through which you have just "wakened and wept," and you will start from it but to find all too real.

God pity the mourners "after the funeral."—Norfolk Virginian.

☞ During the trial of a case at Louisville, a witness persisted in testifying to what his wife had told him. To this the attorneys objected, and it was ruled out by the Judge. He would proceed to tell 'shoost it vash' when the attorney would cry out:

"How do you know that?"

"My vife told me," was the answer.

This was repeated several times. The Judge, unable to control himself, interrupted:

"Suppose your wife were to tell you the heavens had fallen, what would you think?"

"Vell, I tink dey vash down."

An Insane Editor.

An editor, who was evidently insane, or had a strong and vivid imagination, recently got off the following:

I had a dream the other night,
When every thing was still;
I dreamed that each subscriber
Came up and paid his bill;
Each wore a look of honesty,
And smiles were round each eye,
As they handed out the stamps,
Saying "How is that for high?"

The Great Medical Discovery!
Dr. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS,

Hundreds of Thousands
Bear testimony to their wonderful Curative Effects.

WHAT ARE THEY?

THEY ARE NOT A VILE
FANCY DRINK,

Made of Poor Rum, Whiskey, Proof Spirits, and Refuse Liquors, doctored, spiced, and sweetened to please the taste, called "Tonics" "Appetizers," "Restorers," &c., that lead the tippler on to drunkenness and ruin, but are a true Medicine, made from the Native Roots and Herbs of California, free from all Alcoholic Stimulants. They are the GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER and LIFE GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter, and restoring the blood to a healthy condition. No person can take these Bitters, according to directions, and remain long unwell.

$100 will be given for an incurable case, providing the bones are not destroyed by mineral poisons or other means, and the vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, and Gout, Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, and Bladder, these Bitters have been most successful. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood, which is generally produced by derangement of the Digestive Organs.

They invigorate the stomach, and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels, which render them of unequalled efficacy in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Copious Discharges of Urine, Pain in the regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms which are the offsprings of Dyspepsia, are cured by these Bitters.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

PIN, TAPE, and other WORMS, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed.

For full directions, read carefully the circular around each bottle, printed in four languages—English, German, French, and Spanish.
