From the Maryland Farmer.

The Gardens of the Chesapeake.

BY WM. C. LODGE, CLAYMONT, DEL.

Standing upon one of the low sand-hills that skirt the Chesapeake, in the county of Somerset, Maryland, we perceive on our right a number of small islands, stretching, like a string of beads, away up the bay, until lost to sight in the distance. These islands and the eastern shore form a bay extending nearly sixty miles in length, and twenty miles in extreme width, known as Tangier Sound, famous for its abundance of wild game, and its fine fish and oysters. It has also recently become famous for the variety and excellence of the fruits and vegetables cultivated on the islands.

The waters of the sound are, comparatively, shallow, and are so sheltered as to be rarely much disturbed by the stormy winds that frequently stir up the bay proper into waves almost as boisterous as those of the ocean. Hence the bottoms afford the most favorable breeding grounds for oysters and clams, while the islands enjoy a temperature free from the extremes of heat and cold common to the same latitude in the interior. The more delicate plants, that generally require a more southern latitude, here flourish luxuriantly.

Neither frosts nor summer heats greatly interfere with horticultural operations, and, in consequence, the season is lengthened so as to bring to perfection the more tardy fruits. The salt atmosphere, too, is destructive to such insects as render fruit growing in other localities a precarious business. The borer, curculio, and apple moth are, as yet, practically unknown, and while the fruits are not affected in their growth and ripening, the trees grow well, and attain an age much greater than elsewhere in the Middle States. The peach here bears annual crops for forty and fifty years, and the limit to the age of the tree is unknown. Plums, nectarines, apricots, quinces, and figs find a congenial soil and climate, and bear crops of perfect fruit. Melons and sweet potatoes attain equal perfection, while vegetables which delight in a taste of salt, such as celery, asparagus, and cabbages, grow to great size, and are particularly sweet and tender. For peanuts the soil is admirably suited, and large crops are raised.

In a small peach orchard we noticed a fair crop of fruit, while the intervals between the trees were planted in corn, with melons in the alternate hills. The crop of each appeared about as good as though the ground was exclusively devoted to the particular grain or fruit, The owner estimated the products in money as follows: 400 baskets of peaches, $250; 40 bushels corn, $30; 500 melons, $50;—making an aggregate of $330 per acre. The manure (sea moss) had cost him $8 per acre in six years for carting and spreading, while he had cultivated the ground chiefly with his own hands and a single horse, when not employed with his business of oystering.

We visited a small fig orchard, the third year in bearing, and found on the trees from half a bushel to a bushel of fruit, while much had fallen, and remained ungathered, Fig raising is said to be less profitable than peach growing, where a market can easily be reached, as the figs require care in preparation, and boxes for packing are not readily obtained.

Experiments in dwafs, especially pears, and in grape vines, were in all cases satisfactory. Standard pears were not much planted, but the fruit of the dwarfs was very large, and perfect in color and flavor, excelling in the latter respects all the California fruit of that kind we have yet seen. The long season, the almost uninterrupted sunshine, and the light character of the soil that reflects the sun-heat, form a combination of causes all tending to give high color and exquisite flavor to the fruit. Few improved grapes are planted. The fox grows well, but does not appear to grow so vigorously as in our low, rich, clay soils. Although we saw a few wild grape vines climbing over the highest trees, we remarked, as a general rule, that the growth of the vine was comparatively slow, while the fruit was plentiful, large, and perfectly colored. The vine comes early into bearing, and the fruit is so matured in all its wine essentials as to make excellent wine without the addition of either sugar or brandy.

The sea-moss, which is thrown on the beach in large quantities in certain seasons, supplies all the fertilizing properties needed by the vegetation of the islands. In a comparison with the best stable manures, it has been found to be equally beneficial for most crops, and more durable. It is gathered by all without charge, and is often purchased by farmers from the main-land, at about five cents the cart load, and conveyed up the rivers in scows adapted to the purpose.

With all the natural advantages of climate and soil, and the freedom from injurious insects, together with the abundance of fertilizing material so cheaply obtained, the want of regular communication with the great markets has heretofore been a bar to the extensive cultivation of the more perishable fruits and vegetables. The Baltimore and Washington markets are principally supplied with melons and sweet potatoes, and in part with peaches, plums, and apricots from these islands, and the produce is generally carried in pungies—small sail-boats, peculiar to the Chesapeake. The inhabitants, with few exceptions, follow oyster and clam fishing as a business, and only devote their attention to fruits and vegetables during the four months of the year, beginning with May, when the shell-fish are not in a condition for use.

To illustrate the capacity of the Islands, we will mention that on one containing less than three hundred acres exists a population of one hundred and fifty-eight souls. The island is divided into about 30 farms, of one-eighth of an acre to ten acres each, which are worth, at an average valuation, three hundred dollars per acre—a swamp and bit of pine wood inclusive. The most valuable land, however, is that on the shore, covered by water, and suitable for oyster planting. This "real estate" is valued at one thousand dollars and upwards per acre.

All the families on this island appeared to be in comfortable circumstances, and several were considered wealthy, all having obtained their means chiefly from the products of the island and the surrounding waters.

It is no prophecy to say that in a short period these islands will be the gardens from which the markets of Philadelphia and New York will be supplied with the finest vegetables and best fruits. The regular steamers that trade between the southern ports and New York now touch at Cherrystone for freights of oysters, and such vegetables and fruits as the rude cultivation may supply. Intelligent labor only is needed in order to render them the most productive and profitable gardens in America.

THE HOUSE OF DEATH.

Col. John Hay, in his "Castilian Days," tells the story of a noble duke, who shut up his stately mansion when his dead wife was carried out of it, and left it to fall into decay in the midst of surrounding life:

Not a hand has lifted the latchet
Since she went out of the door;
No footsteps shall cross the threshold
Since she can come in no more.

There is rust upon locks and hinges,
And mould and blight on the walls;
And silence faints in the chambers,
And darkness waits in the halls:

Waits as all things have been waiting,
Since she went, that day of Spring,
Borne in her pallid splendor,
To dwell in the Courts of the King.

With lilies on brow and bosom,
With robes of silken sheen,
And her wonderful frozen beauty,
The lilies and silk between.

Red roses she left behind her,
But they died long, long ago;
'Twas the odorous ghost of a blossom
That seemed through the dusk to glow.

The garments she left mock the shadows
With hints of womanly grace,
And her image swims in the mirror
That was so used to her face.

The birds make indolent music
Where the sunshine riots outside,
And the winds are merry and wanton,
With the summer's pomp and pride.

But into this desolate mansion,
Where love has closed the door,
Nor sunshine nor summer shall enter,
Since she can come in no more.

A Literary Curiosity.

San Francisco publishers have issued a fac simile of the manuscript from which Bret Harte's famous rhyme of the Heathen Chinee was put into type in that magazine. Its erasures and interlineations show far better than the printed poem his skill in the art of putting things, Every change was the touch of an artist. As first set up the title was, "On the Sinfulfulness of Ah Sin, as Reported by Truthful James," which in proof is shortened and improved into "Plain Language from Truthful James." The much quoted line:

"With the smile that was childlike and bland,"

was first written:

"With the smile of the angelic band."

The line:

"Which was stuffed full of aces and bowers,"

was first and more feebly written:

"Which contained all the aces and bowers,"

and the nervy line:

"And my language is plain,"

was an improvement on:

"In a language that's plain."

"All this is a very trifling matter," the unprofessional writer may say. But therein lies much of the genius, good friend, of such work. The manuscript winds up with a pen flourish which indicates that the author was in good spirits over what he had just tossed off.

☞ More men kill themselves than women. Women prefer jumping into the water; men prefer to blow their brains out. Aged men cut their throats and aged women take to ropes. More single persons commit suicide than married; more divorced persons than widowers. So says the statistics.

☞ They have a peculiar breach of promise case in the St. Louis courts. Louisa Bulls has sued a father and son for $10,000 damages, her ground of action against the son being that he refused to marry her according to promise, and against the father that he had objected to the match.

An Opinion Worth Printing.—Aunt Judy, a pious old colored woman, is said to have expressed herself as follows with reference to the vociferous habits of certain persons at camp-meeting: "'Taint de rale grace, honey; 'taint de sure glory. You hollers too loud. When you gits de dove in your heart, and de Lamb in your bosom, you'll feel as if you was in dat stable at Beth'lem, and de blessed Virgin had lent you de sleeping baby to hold."

☞ An Irishman in battle was not a little astonished when his comrade, on his right, lost his head by a cannon ball. Soon, a comrade on his left received a wound in his hand, and threw down his gun, yelling with pain, when the Irishman rushed up to him exclaiming, "Blast yer soul, you old woman, stop crying, for bejabers, you make more noise about it than the man who lost his head."

☞ "Mammy," said a precocious little boy, who against his will was made to rock the cradle of his baby brother, "if the Lord has any more babies to give away, don't you take 'em."

☞ The prettiest girls in Utah generally marry Young.
