Masonic.

The triennial Grand Conclave of the Grand Commandery of the United States; and the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States met in Baltimare during the week.

We subjoin the following brief account of the origin of Knights Templar:

The Knights Templar were originally a religious and military Order, founded at Jerusalem in the beginning of the twelfth century by Hugues de Pasganes, Geoffrey de St. Omer, and seven other French Knights, for the protection of the Holy Sepulchre and of pilgrims visiting thither. Baldwin II., King of Jerusalem, bestowed on this Order their first place of residence, and an additional building was acquired from the abbot and cannons of the church and convent of the Temple, whence the Order obtained the name of the "Poor Soldiers of the Temple of Solomon," afterwards abbreviated into Templars. The Knights were bound by their rule to hear the holy office every day, or, if prevented by their military duties, to say a certain number of Paternosters instead; they were to abstain from flesh four days in the week, and from eggs and milk on Friday. They might have each three horses and an esquire, but were forbidden to hunt or fowl. In the earlier part of their history the Templars made a great show of poverty. After the conquest of Jerusalem by the Saracens, they spread over Europe; their valor became everywhere celebrated, immense donations in land and money were showered on them, and nnmbers of the most distinguished families thought themselves honored by enrollment in the Order. In every country where they existed, they had their Governor, called Master of the Temple, or of the militia of the Temple. The Templars had settlements in England for a long period. Their first was in London, and from 1185 their principal seat was in Fleet street, still known as the Temple. The round Church, which bears their name, was dedicated by Heraclius, Patriarch of the Church of the Resurrection, in Jerusalem, in 1185, and the chancel was consecrated in 1240.

The Templars were at first all laymen, and of noble birth. Pope Alexander III., however, in 1162, authorized the admission of spiritual persons, not bound by previous vows, as chaplains to the Order, who were not required to adopt the military vows. A third class was afterwards introduced, consisting of laymen not of noble birth, who served as serving brothers, some of them being attendants on the Knights, and others exercising trades in the houses or lands of the order. Eventually many persons became affiliated members without taking the vows, for the sake of the protection afforded them. As the Templars increased in power and prosperity, the French Kings made a pretext for endeavoring to suppress them, and lay hold of their possession. Accusations, many of which were absurb and incredible, were brought against them by two members of their own body.

Their principal enemy was Philippi IV., of France, who induced Pope Clement V. to accede to a scheme by which members of the Order were seized and imprisoned, their lands confiscated, and many of them tried, convicted and executed for capital crimes. The English Templars were arrested by command of Edward II. and a council, held in London, in 1309, having convicted them of various crimes, most of which were probably imaginary, the King seized their possessions. In 1312 the whole Order throughout Europe was suppressed by the Council of Vienna, and its property bestowed on the Knights of St. John, to which latter order their English possessions were formally transferred by a statute of Edward II., in 1323.

Subsequently they became a part of the Masonic Order. In the United States as well as in Europe where they are also a part of the Masonic Order, though separate and distinct from the American Order of Masonry, the highest grade of which is the Royal Arch. What are their obligations are only known to those who have been initiated, but friendship is one of the strong links which binds them together. The Grand Encampment of the United States is the body from which emanates all the laws by which the State Grand Encampments and subordinate Commanderies are governed.

Greeley on Farming.

Horace Greeley delivered an address to the crowd in attendance upon the Great Northwestern Exposition at Minneapolis on Thursday night. He discoursed very glibly on railroads, and then returned to his farming theories, on which he gave the following original ideas:

Farming used to be very hard work. He who has no knowledge, no skill, and must do whatever [illegible] employer prefers not to do himself, may still find it so. Still the general truth that it grows steadily lighter, as human power gives place to animal or to mechanical, cannot be gainsayed. In my boy-hood mowing grass and reaping grain by hand required strength, involving a persistent strain on the muscles of the arm and hand, to say nothing of the aching back, the bent and crouching body. Hoeing corn and other planted crops was nearly as hard, involving constant effort and a large expenditure of strength. To-day the horse reaps; the man only rides and guides. Can you doubt that this silent revolution is destined to go on until the farmer shall be practically an engineer, and growing crops a pursuit involving calculation, arrangement and foresight, but taxing the muscles far less than the eye and the mind:

The European Circus.

A large crowd congregated on Fourth street, yesterday morning, to witness the lion spring from his cage and mount the dais of the gorgeous car at the command of his keeper. At the tap of the keeper's whip the iron door swung open and the royal beast sprang out and ran up the platform to his seat at the feet of the keeper, where he sat down and gazed about him with the aspect of a grand old monarch

The procession was certainly one of the most gorgeous and extensive ever witnessed in this city. It drew crowds of people to their doors, and the streets were blocked. The entertainment in the afternoon and evening was superior to the circuses which have exhibited here for years. The pavilion is immense and will seat thousands. Among the varieties of the entertainment none elicited so much hearty applause as the athletic feats of the father and two sons, one of whom dressed as a clown, was hardly much larger than a full grown bull-frog, which he strongly resembled. The little fellow, in agility and the complete confidence he seemed to enjoy in his father's ability to toss him about recklessly yet without danger, was very amusing. There are so many amusing things to be seen that we cannot enumerate them. The circus remains two days longer, and will accommodate with comfortable seats all the ladies, children and gentlemen in the city.—Louisville Commercial, July 26.

The Annapolis correspondent of the Baltimore Sun of September 8th, says:

The new railroad project of a line between Baltimore and New York has progressed so far as the incorporation of the company, which has been duly recorded and examined by the Secretary of State. The following are the incorporators: Charles K. Landis, Charles Brewer, David P. Elmer and Edward P. Lansing, of New Jersey, and Richard Swann, James R. Howison and Nicholas Brewer, of Nich., of this city. The name of the corporation is "The Baltimore and New York Railroad Company." The eastern terminus of the road is the boundary line of the States of Maryland and Delaware, between parallels of latitude 39° 10' and 39° 20', and the western the eastern shore of the Chesapeake bay, between the southernmost extremity of Swan Point and latitude 39° 20'. The line is to pass through Kent county. The amount of capital stock is $1,000,000. As Maryland can only give the right of incorporation to that part which passes through the State, the legal papers only show the line of the road through this State.

THE GREAT

EUROPEAN CIRCUS.

No one who has witnessed the gorgeous street pageants of the Great European Circus, which were given in the Streets of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Chicago, can possibly have forgotten them. The brilliant cortege of Knights in burnished steel armor; the the resplendent beauty of the gay lines of elaborately decorated Chariots, Carriages, Platform Cars and Allegorical Tableaux Vivants.

The long procession of Ladies and Gentlemen mounted on gallant steeds; the handsome Globe Car, with the Goddess of Liberty on the summit of an immense sphere representing the World, the Fairy Chariot of Queen Mab drawn by a team of fourteen diminutive Shetland Ponies, the prettiest and cunning little creatures ever seen in the world, and the grand cuiminating feature of the vast pageant, the great Colossal Leouine Car, bearing upon its spacious dais a group of Beautiful Women, in the center of which a large Living Lion!

Men, ladies and children flocked from all quarters of the town to witness the passing splendor, and it was unanimously agreed this procession—the wonderous pageant—was beyond comparison the finest which had ever been witnessed.

This immense establishment, famous alike for its gorgeous street display, the magnitude and variety of its company, and the surpassing excellence of its performances, is under the direction of the proprietors of the Circus which created so much excitement in Paris during the Great Exposition, and now returns more brilliant, more vast and more attractive than ever.

The novelty and grandeur of the Street procession have been enhanced by the addition of an immense vehicular structure called the
