Flowers in the Market.

I've seen on the hill-side and down in the vale,
A meek little blossom with cheeks lilly pale;
I've seen in the woodland the loveliest flowers
Look up through the sunlight and laugh in the showers;
I've been where the primrose unclosed to the air
Its dew-dripping chalice, and nectar hid there;
But joy never flowed in such rills to my heart,
As comes with your smiles in the crowd of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Laugh of the sunbeams, and pearls of the showers,
I love you, I love you, O beautiful flowers!

I've watched where the rose-heart hath whispered its love,
And plighted its vows in the ears of the dove;
I've strayed where the foxglove hung over the rills,
Where the eye of the daisy shone out on the hills;
I've culled the blue harebells, and swung on the vines,
And seen the soft banks where the wood myrtle twines;
But these never thrilled the sweet chords of my heart
Like the light of your smiles in the din of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Footprints of angels, God's light in the bowers,
I love you, I love you, O beautiful flowers!

I've been where the columbine lifted its head,
And the winter green blushed with its berries of red;
I've wandered along, like a waif on the sea,
Where my music for hours was the hum of the bee;
I've danced in the hall of the tangled wild wood,
And heard the loud roar of the cataract's flood;
But peace never nestled so close to my heart,
Till I bent o'er the flowers in the crowd of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
No oak-gnarled branches, no ivy-hung towers,
Would have blessed me like you, O ye beautiful flowers!

My spirit was drooping, earth-weary and worn,
As I passed from my room in the early spring morn;
I yearned for the hill-top, I pined for the vales,
Where I knew the sweet flowers wooed the soft scented gales;
But a crowd was around me, and the tramp of a throng
Hushed the tremulous notes of the Spirit of Song;
But all their wild numbers flowed back to my heart,
When I saw the bright flowers in the crowd of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
How holy and pure are the mystical powers
That live in your presence, O beautiful flowers!

I've seen the gay wreaths o'er the dark locks flung,
And the moss-fringed nest where the oriole swung;
I've seen the blue-curtained violet peep,
Like a timid child from the hedge-row deep;
I've seen where the tiny star-flower looked up,
With its "silver eye," to the sweet lily's cup;
But I knew not how precious they were to my heart,
Till I looked on their forms in the throng of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
I've seen many fine forms in the festive bowers,
But none brighter than you, O ye beautiful flowers!

The hunter who follows the fleet mountain stag,
Or the leaping chaimois o'er the wild shelving crag,
In the triumph and strength of the fearful hour,
Thanks God for the smile of the Alpine flower;
And thus would I murmur a faint hymn of praise,
O'er the blossoms that lighten our lonely ways,
And bless from the depths of a joyous heart,
These lights of the desert, these flowers of the mart.

Beautiful flowers! beautiful flowers!
Black plumes may fall from the coming hours,
But I'll think of you ever, my beautiful flowers!

A Sad Memory.

There was once a good old lady whose great age affected her in little less than in her memory. She had forgotten nearly all her past life, and could not remember the names of her nearest relations. But she never forgot how liable she was to forget, and being very sensitive on the point she endeavored in all sorts of crafty ways to conceal her weakness in this respect. One day an old friend called on her, and in the course of conversation a Mr. Jacob Peters was mentioned. The old lady picked up her ears and tried to look knowing. To save her life she could not remember who Mr. Peters was.

'Yes, yes,' said she, cunningly; 'Jacob Peters! Certainly, certainly, I remember him. But just let's understand each other. People do make such mistakes, you know, when they don't fix things all straight at first. Now tell exactly which Jacob Peters you mean."

'Why don't you remember Jacob!" cried the visitor. Jacob was your first husband."

The old lady mused. 'Jacob Peters,' said she. 'Why, yes, I believe he was my first husband, or something of the kind."

A promise should be given with caution and kept with care. It should be made with the heart and remembered with the head.

WHAT TO READ.—I believe very thoroughly in courses of reading, because I believe in having one book lead to another. But, after the beginning, these courses for different persons will vary much from each other. There are but few books which it is necessary for every intelligent boy and girl, man and woman to have read. First is the Bible, of which not only is an intelligent knowledge necessary for your healthy growth in religious life, but—which is of less consequence, indeed—it is necessary for your tolerable understanding of the literature, or even science, of a world which for eighteen centuries has been under the influence of the Bible. Around the English version of it, as Mr. Marsh shows so well, the English language of the last three centuries has revolved, as the earth revolves around the sun. Second every one ought to be quite well informed as to the history of the country in which he lives. All of you should know the general history of the United States well. You should know the history of your own State in more detail and of your town in the most detail of all. Third, an American needs to have a clear knowledge of the general features of the history of England. Fourth, it is necessary that every intelligent American or Englishman should have read carefully most of Shakespeare's plays. Lastly, it is a disgrace to read even the newspaper, without knowing where the places are that are spoken of. You need, therefore, the very best atlas you can provide yourself with. Remember that what you want from books is the information in them, and the stimulus they give you, and the amusement for your recreation. You do not read for the poor pleasure of saying you have read them.

YOUNG AMERICAN WONDERS.—I wonder what makes papa tell such nice stories to visitors about his hiding his master's rattan when he went to school, and about his running away from the schoolmistress, when she was going to whip him, and then shut me up all day in a dark room because I tried just once to be as smart as he has been? Wonder what made papa say that wicked word when Betsey upset the ink all over his paper, and then slapped my ears when I said the same thing when my kite string broke? Wonder why mamma told Bridget, the other day, to say she was not at home when Tommy Day's mother called, and then puts me to bed without my supper every time I tell a lie? O dear! there are lots of things I want to know. I wish I was man.

FOUND EACH OTHER OUT.—An honest, thrifty, well-to-do German in a Connecticut city applied to a wealthy landlord who rents a great many houses. "This house is to let, certainly," said the owner, "and if, upon inquiry, I find you to be responsible and a suitable man for a tenant, you shall have it." "Very good, Mr. H., you makes just as many questions as you mind. I takes the house when you gets ready." Two days afterward the house-owner called upon the German. 'Well,' he said, 'I've inquired pretty generally respecting your character and means, and as everybody speaks of you as an honest respectable man, of abundant property, you can have the house.' 'Vell, den,' said Hans, 'I takes de house. And I wants to tell you I've asked all about you among de peoples, and dey all say that you is the meanest landlord in de town, but I takes de house all de same."
