GOLDEN WEDDING.—Thursday last, the 20th inst., Mr. and Mrs. Jong L. Ringgold, well known to all who cross Chester River Bridge, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. A half century of married life is permitted to but few couples, and the occasion is worthy of note. Mr. Ringgold and his estimable spouse are sturdy specimens of the vigorous health of our people in the days of their youth. 'Tis not every lad of twenty-five who would risk a trial of muscle with the old man now.

Long may they live, and may the evening of so exceptional a union, be as beautiful as our western sunset, illuminating the point of their departure, and in the hope of a more brilliant resurrection.

PENNSYLVANIA is trying a "local option" liquor law. As this appears to be at present, the favorite form of prohibitory enactment, it may be necessary to say that it is merely giving to the inhabitants of each county the right to refuse the granting of licenses within its borders. The argument is an appeal to the will of the majority—always a popular cry in this country, If the majority in a county, or a district, or even in a village are opposed to the sale of liquor, say the advocates of these laws, they have a perfect right, which should be guaranteed them by the State, to forbid such traffic. They are injured by drunkenness and consequent disorder far more than the State. It is to them an immediate wrong, and to the State only a remote one. So Pennsylvania and other States have passed laws giving to the counties, as the best defined communities, the liberty to refuse to allow the sale of licenses.

WORTON, Hanesville, Md.

DEAR TRANSCRIPT.—It does seem a long time since I had a chat with your numerous readers; but not so long either. Content with waking up the scribbling community who have been so punctual in their effusions. I have been a quiet observer of late, but in reply to the numerous enquiries in your columns, of my "Worton" and her "Squeezebreeze" I'm happy to state that both flourish muchly and am still fighting it out on the same old line.

Happy in mind, body and estate, contentment reigns, despite the storms and cold and mud: for,

"Lo! now, from idle wishes clear,
We make the good we may not find;
Adown the stream we gently steer,
And shift our sails with every wind.
And half by nature, half by reason,
Can still with pliant heart prepare,
The mind, attuned to every season,
The merry heart that laughs at care."

But how time flies! How rapidly the days slip away! Like the dream of a summer night, they go velvet-footed, leaving no echo behind them! you have seen perhaps, a bird flying through the air, and have turned to watch its shadow on your path, but even in this moment bird and shadow have disappeared. So the days and weeks flit on, and almost before we know it the to-morrow for which we yearn, has become the yesterday of our regret. But a little time ago we stood upon the border of the New Year—it seems but a few brief hours since we exchanged kindly greetings with friends, and now behold! In a moment before we think how far our barks have drifted, two of the year's cable of golden links have slipped away from our hands, and lie upon the sands, whence, sail we back and search therefor as we may, we can never drag them forth again.

Should we not be careful, then, how we use the hours of life, seeing how rapidly they slip away, like waves driven before the wind! Upon ourselves, let it not be forgotten, it depends whether they shall bear us on to shipwreck upon some unthought of strand, or to safe anchorage in the harbors of Eternal Peace.

What a severe winter we have had: colder weather and more snow than for many years. We have made good use of the snow, the sleighing for a time being excellent. Many very pleasant reunions, surprizes and merry gatherings have been the order of the day as usual in hospitable old Worton, where young and old, alike, join in the sports and enjoyments of the season. While old Jack Frost has bound up our streams so tight and obstructed our water courses, has at the same time furnished our ice houses with the very best of material, and one is improvident indeed, if he has not secured a full supply with which to refresh his household, when the Dog Star reigns. To the lovers of skating also, to all appearances, the season has had golden hours. Those bent upon the enjoyment of this health-giving exercise, we've seen with skates in hand, moving toward the nearest pond or creek to cut the pigeon wing or flutter.

A winter is essential to physical health, essential to agriculture, and a source of enjoyment in a hundred ways. But a winter that is without skating, or that offers no snow-carpet upon which the sleigh may dart, and over which the merry bells may tintinnabulate, is a winter that, to the view of the rising generation, is the play of "Hamlet" from which even the name of Hamlet is omitted. But in the stormy blasts let us not forget the unfortunate in life, and see that the wolf come not to the door of our fellow creatures. In most communities there is suffering and want—when we look for it—and help when we will.

"Amid the freezing sleet and snow
The timid birdling comes;
In pity drive him not away,
But scatter out your crumbs.

Winter also is the season for trips on the "light fantastic toe" and the lovers of the Terpsichorean art, of both sexes, anxiously look forward to every reunion, when they will pass an evening in this exhilarating enjoyment. Besides appearing in the festive hall, making graceful movements to the strains of orchestral music, the symmetrical movements then obtained will impart grace to their actions ever afterward: and the exercise is excellent for the development of the muscle, and therefore, as a branch of physical culture, should receive proper attention. Dancing is approved of by the scriptures. and from the earliest days of the world, all nations indulged in it—and, in fact, some people held it with a sort of sacred reverence, and associated it with their religious worship.

The Sunday school entertainment took place last Wednesday evening and notwithstanding the miserably bad roads had a good house. The exercises consisted of the reading of some choice selections by Rev. T. O. Crouse, one of our officiating clergymen, singing by some of our ladies, instrumental music by the organist, and the exhibition of Scioptican by Prof. Hulme. Those who failed to hear Mr. Crouse missed a treat, as he is most assuredly a proficient in the art.—Space will not allow the complimentary notice this entertainment deserves. Worton never half does anything!

As "Farmer" keeps you so well posted upon the sayings and doings of the "agricultural Club" I shall pass by the flourishing institution without comment, except, this—

Its sayings are quoted with favor;
Its judge when the questions arise,
And parties abide the decision
As something both final and wise.

The River Improvement.—The committee on commerce in the House of Representatives reported, on Saturday last, in favor of an additional appropriation of $5,000 for the improvement of the Wicomico river at this town.

This will have the effect, if passed, of widening the canal to the extent of 50 feet and although such a canal cannot answer all the demands of our commerce, will be a great improvement upon the present condition of the river.

Public Discussion.—The Salisbury Lyceum will hold a public discussion in the Court Room on the 22nd or 24th instant. The question to be discussed is one which is rather latitudinous and the manner proposed for its discussion is quite novel. The question reads thus:

Sale of Real Estate.—Mr. Wm. Birckhead as Trustee, has sold 600 acres of land belonging to Henry J. B. Smith, to Mr. Lemuel Malone, for the sum of $3,575.—The land is situated in Pittsburg District near Pittsville.
