ALL IS WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Katharine Forsyth was a brave woman, else I should not have this story to write, the terrible wildness of the night, the furious lashing of the rain, the roar of the angry sea, made her falter for a moment upon the threshold before going out. The wind in that moment whirled past her, and blew open the half shut library door, bringing her father from the room to see what had happened.

"Katharine, you are not going out?" in amazement,

"Yes."

There was certainly no hesitation in her voice and something in her eyes made her father careful of his next words.

"Let me go if it is a necessary errand."

"It is a necessary errand, but one which my father would not wish to attend to," she said, with her eyes looking straight into his. A "messenger brought me five minutes since that Courtney Alcott's vessel was upon the rocks at Bay Stone Point."

"You will do nothing unwomanly, I trust," Mr. Forsyth said, in real alarm now, as he took his rubber coat from the rack, and hastily slipped it on.

"You had better not go, father if you are afraid of me," she said, as quietly as before though he saw well enough it was a forced quiet, "for I am afraid of myself to-night. One thing is certain, if Captain Alcott lives to see me again, he will know that I love him, and that it was no fault of mine that he thought differently six months ago."

Mr. Forsyth fairly groaned. He had been so sure of her, and so certain only this very evening that she would accept his plans for uniting the house and the lands of the Forsyths and the Holworths, but now this plebeian, that he hated like poison, must come again between him and his most cherished hopes.

There are times when such a thing as authority in a parent is not, and cannot be thought of. This was his time. He must go with her, and while her face held that awful look, if he was a wise man, there would be little said.

It was a full mile to the Point, and they started out, silent and anxious. He hoped in his heart that the vessel would go to atoms, though he dared not think that he hoped so, though as he strode on beside his quiet daughter, he had some doubts whether that event would mend the matter in the end. Katharine had, from her young girlhood—she was now twenty-three—been almost incomprehensible person to those who knew her best, and a year back she had reached the climax of incomprehensibility, by accepting, tacitly, the almost reckless adoration of Captain Alcott, who cared about as little for her aristocratic blood as any man living, but who would almost if not quite, have laid down his life, if needed be, for the love of this woman.

Katharine's father had managed to see him alone when he came to make his last call before sailing, and in reply to the Captain's question if he would entrust his daughter to his keeping, Mr. Forsyth had answered him that he could not, because other plans were matured for her—that Katherine was engaged to-day—would he excuse her, and had bowed him out with all the politeness of an earl, and the Captain had gone off to sea, cursing the proud father who stood between him and the dearest hope he had ever had, and almost cursing the daughter, too.

Mr. Forsyth had told his daughter of the interview, told every particular, without comment, because he was a little afraid not to let her know it, and she had received the intelligence with equal reticence, which the father hoped agured well, though for the life of him he could not tell whether it did or whether it did not.

To-night he knew for a certainly where his daughter's heart was, and he knew as well that he had little to hope for unless Providence should favor him by opening the door into the next world for this suitor of his daughter.

As they emerged from the grove of pines which skirted the beach, the spray began to cut their faces sharply, and the whole fury of the storm seemed to strike them as it had not done before.

"It is a dreadful night, Katharine, You had best return."

"Hush!" Her voice was sharp and strained. "I had rather by far drown in this hungry ocean here, than live to know that he had gone down."

She did not usually go to her father or any one else with her heart secrets, but to-night she would have spoken to any one who had been near her, with little heed as to who that person was.

The wreckers were gathered upon the sand with boats, ropes, life-preservers, everything needful, but nothing was being done, nothing could be done they told Mr. Forsyth, and all the while came the boom! boom! boom! from the guns of the ill-fated vessel upon the rocks, around which the sea was tugging, drawing and surging, as if eager to swallow it up and be done with it at once.

Katharine left her father's side and went up to one of the bravest of the men.

"How can you stand here? Is no one ready to go with you!" she asked.

"Yes we be all ready enough, Miss, but the good Lord help the man who goes out to-night."

Katharine said not another word, but thanking the "good Lord" that she knew how to handle both a boat and a pair of oars, she slipped through them, and before any one knew it she had unfastened a boat, was in it, and going out swiftly on a receding wave toward the rock and—him.

The light flared upon white faces enough when they found that a woman had gone out alone, and Mr. Forsyth gasped for breath, and nearly fainted when he really believed that it was true.

The rest of that long night—and it seemed as if morning would never come—they paced up and down the beach, while the storm raged on, for not a man would follow the mad woman, though Mr. Forsyth offered them more money than most of them had ever seen at once in all their lives, if they would make the attempt. He could not row himself, and so, half crazed, knowing now how well he loved his child, he had to endure as best he might the horrors of that time, which his heart told him would end in certain death. One such hour will teach us more of ourselves than a common lifetime. Oh if he had his treasure for one poor half hour now, how he would take her to his heart. They had distrusted each other for many days, but there was love, boundless stores of it, in the depths of their hearts for each other, he knew, and as he wrung his hands in agony of despair, and cried out for his child, the rough men felt their own hearts breaking up, though they could not help him.

At last, as the morning began to dawn, a life-boat was thrown upon the shore, scattering its freight of half lifeless bodies, some into the sea, and some upon the land, but it was not Katharine's boat, and neither she or the Captain were among the number.

There was work enough to do now, and it was done with a right good will. The first one that could speak said that all the crew had left the ship; that the Captain had gone last, where or how none of them knew, though one of them said after a while that he had a kind of half recollection of hearing the Captain cry out: "My God! Katharine," as he swung over the ship's side, but he could tell nothing certainly, there had been such confusion when the ship began to go to pieces.

In the middle of the forenoon the storm abated, and another boat made into the bay, with Captain Alcott on board, but though he had thought he saw Katharine the night before he believed it to be only his imagination, and knew nothing of her now only what they told him, that she had gone out to save him from death if she could.

In an hour after he had landed, he, with Mr. Forsyth, had taken a steam tug and were off after the woman who was probably lying at that moment fathoms deep beneath the cruel waves.

Captain Alcott kept his own lookout, and he had both heaven and hell in his head during that awful search, for if he did not find her, and his reason told him that it was the merest folly to hope for such a thing, he would never forgive the man who kept close beside him at every turn, and whose worn, haggard face was enough to move a stone to pity. If he did find her, if God would but hear and answer this, the most terribly in earnest prayer that he had ever uttered in his life, it would make him a changed man for all time.

We make such vows in these dire straits which overtake us now and then, the worse for us if we do not keep them.

The sun began to get low in the Western horizon, and yet nothing. Would it be in vain? Could he give her up now; just as he was certain of her love, and upon the very threshold of what might be bliss? His eyes were straining far and wide in every direction, the hope and despair alternating in them, making them terrible to see. He was a strong man, but strong men love with a fearful intensity sometimes, and love over a possible or probable grave, is always more or less terrible.

At last, after another hour, he gave such a start that Mr. Forsyth caught him, thinking he was about to plunge overboard.

"Do you see that?" he said, his face white as ashes, pointing off to what seemed to be a white speck upon the water.

Then came the command:

"More steam on! Straight ahead!"

As for Katharine, God took care of her as he does of us all when everything human fails.

She had somehow outlived the stormy night, and though she was drifting helplessly out to sea, her oars had been lost long before, she was alive, and kept up a faint courage until she knew that help was coming. When they lifted her on board, she lay like one dead, and for hours afterward she only repeated deliriously in answer to either her father or her lover: "You will let him drown! You will let him drown!"

By the time Mr. Forsyth saw his daughter really saved, he was quite ready, that she should become Mrs Captain Alcott, and as "All is well that ends well," the lesson was a good one for him, and one certainly not likely to be soon forgotten.

Every year increases the popularity of this valuable Hair Preparation; which is due to merit alone. We can assure our old patrons that it is kept fully up to its high standard; and it is the only reliable and perfected preparation for restoring GRAY OR FADED HAIR to its youthful color, making it soft, lustrous, and silken. The scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean. It removes all eruptions and dandruff, and, by its tonic properties, prevents the hair from falling out, as it stimulates and nourishes the hair-glands. By its use, the hair grows thicker and stronger. In baldness, it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, and will create a new growth, except in extreme old age. It is the most economical HAIR DRESSING ever used, as it requires fewer applications, and gives the hair a splendid, glossy appearance. A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the BEST PREPARATION for its intended purposes."

FOR THE WHISKERS.

As our Renewer in many cases requires too long a time, and too much care, to restore gray or faded Whiskers, we have prepared this dye, in one preparation; which will quickly and effectually accomplish this result. It is easily applied, and produces a color which will neither rub nor wash off. Sold by all Druggists. Price Fifty Cents.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For the relief and cure of all derangements in the stomach, liver, and bowels. They are a mild aperient, and an excellent purgative. Being purely vegetable, they contain no mercury or mineral whatever. Much serious sickness and suffering is prevented by their timely use; and every family should have them on hand for their protection and relief, when required. Long experience has proved them to be the safest, surest, and best of all the Pills with which the market abounds. By their occasional use, the blood is purified, the corruptions of the system expelled, obstructions removed, and the whole machinery of life restored to its healthy activity. Internal organs which become clogged and sluggish are cleansed by Ayer's Pills, and stimulated into action. Thus incipient disease is changed into health, the value of which change, when reckoned on the vast multitudes who enjoy it, can hardly be computed. Their sugar coating makes them pleasant to take, and preserves their virtues unimpaired for any length of time, so that they are ever fresh, and perfectly reliable. Although searching, they are mild, and operate without disturbance to the constitution, or diet, or occupation.

Full directions are given on the wrapper to each box, how to use them as a Family Physic, and for the following complaints, which these Pills rapidly cure:—

For Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Listlessness, Languor, and Loss of Appetite, they should be taken moderately to stimulate the stomach, and restore its healthy tone and action.

For Liver Complaint and its various symptoms, Bilious Headache, Sick Headache, Jaundice or Green Sickness, Bilious Colic and Bilious Fevers, they should be judiciously taken for each case, to correct the diseased action or remove the obstructions which cause it.

For Dysentery or Diarrhœa, but one mild dose is generally required.

For Rheumatism, Gout, Gravel, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the Side, Back, and Loins, they should be continuously taken, as required, to change the diseased action of the system. With such change those complaints disappear.

For Dropsy and Dropsical Swellings, they should be taken in large and frequent doses to produce the effect of a drastic purge.

For Suppression, a large dose should be taken, as it produces the desired effect by sympathy.

As a Dinner Pill, take one or two Pills to promote digestion and relieve the stomach.

An occasional dose stimulates the stomach and bowels, restores the appetite, and invigorates the system. Hence it is often advantageous when no serious derangement exists. One who feels tolerably well, often finds that a dose of these Pills makes him feel decidedly better, from their cleansing and renovating effect on the digestive apparatus.

which can be cured by a timely resort to this standard preparation, as has been proved by the hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors. It is acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable preparation ever introduced for the relief and cure of all Lung complaints, and is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years. When resorted to in season it seldom fails to effect a speedy cure in the most severe cases of Coughs, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza, Asthma, Colds, Sore Throat, Pains or Soreness in the Chest and Side, Liver Complaint, Bleeding at the Lungs, &c. THE

EUREKA

FANNING MILL.

The Greatest Invention

OF THE 19th CENTURY!

FARMERS, LOOK TO YOUR INTEREST.

THE attention of Farmers and Mechanics is particularly directed to the combined economy, utility and practicability of the Eureka Mill, and to the many other advantages it possesses over every othhr Fanning Mill which has been introduced to the public. It is the fruit of long and patient investigation by the inventor, who has made it his constant study for over twenty years. He has secured several patents for Mills, and has always been rewarded with the best of success. But not feeling satisfied with his former attainments, he determined to reach the climax, and now he now believes that his new invention will warrant him in exclaiming in the joy of his heart, like the philosopher, Phythagoras, EUREKA, signifying in the Grecian language, "I have found it." This has given the name to this new Mill.

In this Mill are all the former improvements, to which have been added several more, adding still greater advantages than were at first anticipated, or even thought possible by the inventor himself. It embraces the three great essentials necessary in every invention.

It combines Utility, Economy and Fracticability!

THE EUREKA MILL

Is small and lighter, and is capable of doing more and better work in a given time than any other Mill ever invented. It is the only Mill that will successfully remove from wheat such pests as Cockle, Garlic, Oats, Rye, &c.

Should an extra quality of grain for seed or gristing purposes be required, it can be so arranged as to catch in one box perfect grain, and in the other, grain fit for market or mill. Here is made a great saving usually lost sight of; for, nearly one-quarter of the grain cleaned in the common Mills is lost when sown, on account of shrunken kernels and inferior grain. The Eureka Mill saves all this, and gives seed every kernel of which will grow when put into the ground, and this saving will, in a short time, pay for the Mill.

HINES & BURCHINAL,

Chestertown, Md.,

Owners of the Mill, are having them manufactured at the Sash Factory and Planing Mill of NOLAND & Co., Port Deposit, Md., which is a guarantee they will be put up in the very best manner.
