Farm and Household.

Recent experiments in Germany go to show that in feeding potatoes to milch cows they should be fed raw if milk is wanted, and cooked if butter is the object.

A Canadian, now in his grave, is believed to have died from the effects of eating part of a cabbage from a patch in which Paris green was used to kill the worms.

We loosen a wet soil to facilitate evaporation, and roll or otherwise compress a dry soil to retard it. A compressed soil retards moisture and facilitates germination.

Good country roads facilitate trade intercourse, promote comfort and convenience, increase the value of farms, add attractiveness to the neighborhood, and stimulate individual improvements.

Mr. Oliver Dalrymple, the great Minnesota farmer, intends to cultivate 30,000 acres in wheat this year. It is estimated that he will employ 20 steam threshers, with 135 reaping machines.

E. B. S., writes us that he stuck court-plaster over an egg found broken in the nest after the hen had been setting a week, and in due time it gave a chick as sprightly as any of the brood.

A successful potato grower advocates planting potatoes cut to single eyes only, and reports a yield of 488 bushels of Early Rose to an acre, and a large bushel yield from 22 eyes of another variety planted in hills three feet apart, one eye to the hill.

A farmer, who for many years had followed the old custom of planting pumpkins with his corn, reports that the crop is earlier in arriving at maturity and larger in amount since he has abandoned the practice. The increase in his corn crop was of more value than the pumpkins.

Prof. Chas. S. Sargent, of Brookline, who took the first prize of the Massachusetts Board for print-butter, gives each of his Jersey cows a daily ration of one quart of Indian meal, two quarts shorts, one-fourth bushel carrots and about ten pounds English hay.

The raising of 30 bushels of wheat to the acre will remove from the land 51 pounds of nitrogen, 24 pounds of phosphoric acid, and 39 pounds of potash. This could be replaced by 60 pounds of sulphate of ammonia, 171 pounds of super-phosphate of lime, and 76 pounds of chloride of potassium.

Lambs Scouring.—Give each lamb an ounce of castor oil. Four hours thereafter, and twice daily; give one to two drachms of magnesia in a little thin gruel, from a bottle.—Place salt constantly within reach of young and old, not mixing it among their food, and changing their food frequently, giving oats, small quantities of ground oil-cake. Keep the animals indoors, especially at night, and during cold, sleety and wet weather.

Repairing Post-and-Rail Fences.—It is said that a post-and-rail fence made of chestnut timber would last a life-time if it were not for the posts rotting off at the ground. When ever the latter occurs, all that is necessary is to plant new posts (without being morticed) close alongside those that have rotted off, and then, with a piece of bailing-wire, tie the tops of the old posts to the tops of the new ones, and, if necessary, the bottoms of the old posts to the bottoms of new ones in like manner. In this way the same set of rails will outlast several sets of posts, and the strength of the fence be preserved for many years if not for a life-time.

Protecting Young Apple Trees from the Borer.—The most effectual, if not the only way to protect young apple trees from the borer is simply to bandage the lower part of the tree with any kind of muslin or cloth—the bandage to extend from about six inches above the ground to about two inches below it. Apply the bandage as soon in the spring as possible, allowing it to remain on until the last of October. The beetle lays its eggs an inch or two above the ground in early spring, and the eggs, being laid on the sunny side of the tree, hatch as soon as the days become sufficiently warm, when the young grub, finding its way down to the soft bark, gradually works its way in. The bandage prevents both the laying of the egg and the entrance of the grub. The same will apply to peach trees.

To make a mustard plaster that will draw well, but not blister, mix with the white of an egg instead of water or vinegar.

Fresh radishes, well masticated, and the various kinds of turnips, if digestion is strong enough for them, are good for gravel.

To Produce Figures on Wood.—Slack some lime in stale wine. Dip a brush in it and form on the wood figures to suit your fancy. When dry, rub well with a rind of pork.

The following is recommended as a chilblain ointment: Take of lard nine ounces, oil of almonds three and a half ounces, white wax one and a half ounces, chaphor, powdered, one and a half ounces. Mix and apply to the chilblain.

Damp Closets.—For a damp closet or cup-board, which is liable to cause mildew, place in it a saucer full of quick lime, and it will not only absorb all apparent dampness, but sweeten and disinfect the place.—Renew it once a fortnight or as often as it becomes slacked.

For soft corns dip a piece of linen cloth in turpentine and wrap it around the toe where the corn is situated, night and morning. The relief will be immediate, after a few days, and the corn will disappear.

Tapioca Custard.—Soak three large tablespoonfuls of tapioca over night in a pint of cold water; the next morning add one quart of milk, a little salt, and boil, four eggs, one half cupful of sugar, flavor with lemon or vanilla, or meringue can be made from the whites of the eggs by adding a little powdered sugar, and then browning it in the oven.

The Rime of the Thompkins Motor; Or, The Secret, the Speculator and the Stockholders.

[From the New York Sunday World.]

I.

It was a lean and haggard man
Whose seams were whity blue,
Whose knees and elbows glossy were,
Who holes had in each shoe,
That to himself said seriously
One day, "What shall I do?
Business is booming everywhere,
And folks have lots of cash
And will buy any sort of share
Ere comes the certain crash.
'Tis sweet in the meadows of Wall street,
As the poet says, to see
The young 'lambs' that go skipping about
By the side of that cuss, J. G.*—
The contents of their purses how
Shall I divert to me?
Electric lights are overdone,
And on the Exchange I've found
Two acres of Western silver mines
For every acre of ground.
Against the charms of Leadville, Col.,
And of Deadwood, Dakota,
What is the thing that I can bring?
I know—the Tompkins Motor!"

II.

A soda-fount condemned he bought,
A cast-off copying-press,
An anvil, and a spinning-wheel
Of the days of goo l Queen Bess,
And of old gas and water pipe
Some fifty yards I guess,
And hammered and soldered and fastened them
In a conglomerate mess.
And on fifteen sheets of Bristol board
In black and red and blue
A nightmare of valves and pipes and cranks
And pistons and things he drew,
With arrows and figures and dotted lines
And letters not a few.
And to several guileless capitalists
He went and louted low,
And urged them to come in and form
The Tompkins Motor Co.
And when the capitalists were met,
With a prefatory hem
He pointed to his machine and plans,
And thus he spake to them:

III.

"Friends, Americans and countrymen,
Before you here you see
The biggest big invention of
The nineteenth century.
My sleeping and my waking thoughts
For twenty-seven years
It's had; with care all gray my hair,
All red my nose appears.
I've let my family starve to death
That the machine might thrive,
And have not tasted meat myself
Since April, '75.
You of the Keely motor know?
Well mine, I am not coy
To say, that motor knocks as high
As the kite of Gilderoy.
The great advantage of my scheme
Must patent be to all;
He on cold water doth rely,
I upon alcohol.

IV.

"There is no man on earth so blind
But with half an eye can see
My motor o'er the Keely hath Superiority.
Frinstance, a feeble woman take
On Cherry street or Mott,
Bid her her thirst with water slake,
And weak she is, I wot;
But fill that same weak woman up
With whiskey, rum or gin,
And 'twill take five patrolmen stout
At least to run her in.
Whene'er a race-horse men would have
In any race to fail,
They give him just before the start
Of water half a pail;
But if they'd have him win the race,
Though his rivals better be,
They give him at the starting-post
A pint of eau-de-vie.
Go up unto the reservoir
And endeavor to explode
Its contents—if the tank blows up
I freely will be blowed;
But try in a distillery
The same experiment,
There'll come a burst of thunder-sound—
Dost like the argument?

V.

"Now I have," went the Tompkins on,
While a pin you could hear fall,
"The secret found to apply the force
Latent in alcohol.
I pour into this funnel here
A finger, say, of gin,
Put my foot upon this treadle and
The wheel around doth spin.
The revolutions are not due
To any pressure pedal;
'Tis but out of regard for you
That I stand on the treadle,
For did I not thus the force confine
The motor might explode
And over the Middle Atlantic States
In fragments we'd be strewed.
With your own eyes you've seen it work;
I turn this cock; just taste
The gin—its flavor's not impaired,
No drop has gone to waste.
As to the nature of the force
And its mode of generation,
I naturally must decline
To give you information
Till I have duly patented
The means for its application;
But reasonable estimates—
Figures the truth must clinch—
Show ten hundred thousand million tons
Pressure to the square inch.
When we have made a reservoir
That can that pressure stand
The reign of steam and air compressed
Is o'er by sea and land."

VI.

With cheers they bought the patent out
And hired the projector
Of the Tompkins Motor Co. to be
Its managing director.
Daily the Tompkins shutteth himself
His private office in,
With the plans and models of his machine
And a demijohn of gin.
Nightly the Thompkins cometh forth
With inventing so distraught
That his tangled legs give way beneath
The Burden ot his Thought.
And a neighboring iron factory
Daily and nightly runs,
Making a reservoir to stand ten
Hundred thousand million tons,
And when one is made the Tompkins bold
The shareholders convenes,
And with hydraulic pressure bursts
The thing to smithereens,
And he cries, "Ye see 'twould useless be
The motor to apply
Till a strong enough reservoir has been found
In the sweet by and by."
And the merry shareholders, thus convinced
Of the motor's power intense,
Order a reservoir twice as strong,
Regardless of expense,
And in their happiness cheer aloud,
And grin like cats o' Chesshire.

VII.

But I wish I knew what Thompkins'll do
When they get one that stands the pressure!

* I have toned down the quotation, which in the profane original reads:
"'Tis sweet in the meadows to see the young lambs
Go skipping about by the side of their dams."

THE UNDERSIGNED takes this method of tendering his heartfelt thanks to his old friends and the public generally for the liberal support and sympathy so generously extend to him under the recent adverse circumstances by which he has been surrounded, and takes great pleasure in informing them that the house, in a few days, will be in first-class condition, the repairs and improvements thereto being made under his own supervision.

THE STABLING,

which is commodious and in excellent condition, is now under his control, and those entrusting their horses and carriages to his care may rest assured that they will be faithfully attended to by trusty and experienced hostlers.

THE TABLE,

as heretofore, will always be found supplied with substantials and delicacies of the season, and will be under the experienced management of his wife, who will see that no pains are spared to make it, in every respect, first-class.

With the fixed purpose of leaving nothing undone on my part which will conduce to the comfort of my guests, I respectfully solicit the patronage of the public.
