Farm and Household.

Loose and Compact Soils and Evaporation.—In order to have the greatest evaporation, the surface of the soil must be constantly wet. After the upper layer of the soil has had its water evaporated it must be supplied from below, in order that evaporation must go on. This supply from below depends upon the capillarity of the soil; or, in other words the fineness of the pores—the finer the pores the greater the supply.—A compact soil has greater capillary power, and when the upper surface is comparatively dry will evaporate a large amount of moisture. If such a soil is broken up and the surface made to consist of coarse lumps, the power to raise water from below is much weakened, and there is the explanation of the general belief that it is important to keep a soil loose in dry weather, and break up any crust that may have formed after a shower.

Wool Raising.—Speaking of the capacity of this country for the economical production of wool in the face of which we are large importers, the New York Indicator says:

England and Wales contain 58,320 square miles, Ireland 31,874, and Scotland 30,685; total 120,879 square miles. The State of Texas contains 274,356 square miles, and yet Great Britain and Ireland produce very nearly as much marketable wool as the whole of the United States. With a practically unlimited area, any part of which is available for sheep-growing, we yet are large importers of foreign wool, over 65,000,000 of pounds having been imported during the last year as against about 35,000,000 the year previous, notwithstanding that there is a heavy import duty. In view of these facts, is it not a little surprising that capital does not seem to flow in the direction of wool-growing? The production of wool seems to be a very important factor in national independence; and in other countries, particularly in Great Britain, considered an essential part of nearly every farmer's business. The risks in sheep farming are few in immense tracts of this country, and the business is attractive from its comparative freedom from the excessive toil and anxiety consequent upon other agricultural pursuits. There is a good opening in this direction.

Wash colored hose in milk-warm water, rinse, turn and dry quickly.

If table cutlery is kept clean from the start, little trouble will keep it in order.

To cleanse ivory ornaments, rub them well with fresh butter—i. e., without salt—and put them in the sunshine.

The vegetable crops that do well on a northern aspect are cauliflower, broccoli, lettuce, parsley and spinach.

Salt provisions of whatever kind are said to lose more of their saltness by being soaked in sea water than in fresh.

Dip a new broom in hot water to make it durable. To keep a broom from getting stiff and hard hang it in the cellar way.

C. M. Hovey says the pear has been grafted on the quince for 200 years without causing the slightest variation in the fruit.

Old wall paper can be very much improved in appearance by simply rubbing it well with a flannel cloth dipped in oat meal.

When milk sours scalding will render it sweet again. The whey separates from the curd, and the former is better than shortening in bread.

There is nothing that makes a prettier and fresher colored garden walk than fresh tanbark. It is death to grass and weeds and can be renewed with a very thin coating.

Washing Ties.—The best mode of washing gentlemen's neckties is to let them soak a little, then wash with hot soap and water, rinse in cold water slightly blued, dry them, dip them once more in cold water, starch, and wring them thoroughly; then iron.

Washing Black Stockings.—Wash in a cool lather of plain white soap and rain water, with a little ammonia mixed in it. Keep from the air while drying, by rolling in a cloth; do not wring, but press the moisture well out. Epsom salts and water form a good rinse.

To Clean Steel Ornaments.—Dip a small brush into some paraffin and then into some emery powder (such as is used in the knife machines), and well brush the ornaments, and all the rust will soon come off; polish with a dry leather and duster; it will clean any steel article.

An English Woman's Plan for Washing.—I never use washing powders or dry soap for flannels or print dresses, etc. I use bicarbonate of soda for white flannels, and sometimes liquid ammonia with the soap, but the bicarbonate of soda will not injure the most delicate colors if the water is not too hot, as I strain the water through the hair sieve after doing the flannels. To wash the prints, etc., I don't use ammonia.—For the flannels I never rub the soap, but have it all boiled, and I find from experience it answers better, and is much more economical. For dark woolen hose, dresses, blue serge suits, etc., never use soap, but boil for five minutes some bicarbonate of soda and wash with a machine, or rub with the hands, then rinse in clean water and stiffen with glue. I have all dark things dried as quickly as possible, mingle them in a towel before they are dry, and iron until they are on the wrong side. With regard to the buttons, I have all mine put on to dresses with rings. Linen buttons I do not take off; nightshirts I make to slip over the head, and have a stud for the neck. The day and dress shirts I make with a buttonhole at the back of the neck for a stud instead of a button, so that I never have the trouble of sewing buttons on the shirts when wanted. The white quilts I stitch round with the machine—old sheets too—and this makes them stronger, not so easily torn on the line, and it is never seen. Table-cloths might be done the same way.

OUR FARMER'S SONG.

[Lone Star Rural.]

When I was a boy, to keep me alive,
A canal boat team I was driven to drive.
I traveled on foot and the reins I did yank,
And held the mule's tail on the boat's gang plank.
I clung to that tail with such tight intent,
That now I'm a candidate for President.

A trade I learned and theology scuffled,
And I joined like wise the legal band,
But politics I found was my strongest game
And so in Congressman I soon became.
As Congressman I followed such a goodly bent,
That now I'm a candidate for President.

I took my bribery dividend,
But finding that it didn't my credit extend,
With all the solemnity an oath invokes,
I swore that my sins were as upright as oaks.
I swore so decently I never got a cent
That now I'm a candidate for President.

Next with Dick Parsons I chanced to meet,
Who converted me to pavements, abstract and concrete;
As attorney I accepted a good fat fee,
For arguing before my own committee.
So convincing did I make that argument
That now I'm a candidate for President.

When first they talked of the back-pay steal,
I pretended to oppose it with righteous zeal,
But while I thus dust in the people's eyes threw,
I rushed through the measure and my back pay drew.
I pushed through that measure with such blandishment
That now I'm a candidate for President.

Now, Republicans all, whoever you may be,
If you want to rise to the top of the tree,
In your youth get a chance to drive a mule,
And in politics be guided by this golden rule:
Take whatever you can get, and swear it was lent,
And you all may be candidates for President!

A NIGHT WATCH.

"Is it not morning yet?" From side to side
The sick girl tossed, hot-browed and heavy-eyed,
And moaned with feverish breath when I replied,
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" Oh, leaden hours,
How slow they move! The night more darkly lowers
Cold on the wan leaves strikes the sudden shower—
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" The clock ticks on,
The sands fall low, and half the night is gone
Again I answer to the restless moan—
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" With tender care
I bathe her brow and smooth her damp fair hair,
And try to soothe her with soft words of prayer,
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" If she could sleep,
If those tired lids those burning eyes could keep!
God knows the thorns are sharp, the road is steep!
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" "Tis coming, dear,"
And while I speak, the shadows press more near,
And all the room grows colder with my fear,
"It is not morning yet."

"Is it not morning yet?" How faint and low
The piteous accents! Do not tremble so,
My heart, nor fall me, while I answer, "No
It is not morning yet?"

"Is it not morning yet?" I know my beads
God answers while the eastern sky glows red
And smiles upon the still face on the bed—
"Yes, it is morning now!"

BILL ARP ON THE PRESS.

Your paper is a great comfort to me. In every number I find something to put away in mind and memory; something that I did not know before, and which will be of advantage to me in time to come. If a man can read he can get a good education by taking one good paper; he can keep up with the world, and make himself an entertaining member of society; he can talk up a little on most any subject. Book learning is a very good thing, but I know a man who has a power of that, but he never reads the papers, and passes for a fool in his neighborhood.

Some papers are not of much account as to appearance, but I never took one that didn't pay me, in some way, more than I paid for it. One time an old friend started a little paper away down in Southwestern Georgia, and sent it to me, and I subscribed just to encourage him, and so after a while it published a notice that an administrator had an order to sell several lots of land at public outcry, and one of the lots was in my county. So I inquired about the lot, and wrote to my friend to attend the sale and run it up to fifty dollars.

He did so, and bid off the lot for me at thirty dollars, and I sold it in a month to the man it joined for a hundred, and so I made sixty-eight dollars clear by taking that paper. My father told me that when he was a young man, he saw a notice in a paper that a school teacher was wanted away off in a distant county, and he went down there and got the situation, and a little girl was sent to him, and after a while she grew up mighty sweet and pretty, and he fell in love with her and married her. Now, if he hadn't took that paper, what do you reckon would have become of me? Wouldn't I be some other feller, or maybe not be at all?

"What do you suppose I'll look like when I get out of this?" indignantly inquired a fashionably dressed young lady of the conductor of a fearfully overcrowded street car the other day. "A good deal like crushed sugar, Miss," said the ticket puncher. And the lady stood up and rode four blocks further, with the smile of an angel.

"What earthly use is it," exclaimed a languid Washington swell the other morning, "our twying to be awistocwatic, monarchical, and that sort of thing, when a Senator of the United States eats peanuts while widing in the stweet car! We're nothing but a howid wepublic, after all."

An old lady visiting the Antiquarian Museum in Edinburgh the other day, on inspecting the old weapons very earnestly, and failing to find what she was apparently looking for, asked a visitor if he could tell her whereabout they kept the Axe of the Apostles.

A woman may be worth millions, yet she will write and cross-write her paper until the letter is almost illegible rather than begin on another sheet.

The habits of fruit are peculiar. We have seen a rasin box, a fig drum, and an apple stand all day on the corner of a street.
