TREATMENT OF UNFRUITFUL TREES.

B. Benjamin, of New York, writes: "In reply to the query of J. D. Lansing, Iowa, concerning large and thrifty apple trees that bear no fruit, I will say that barrenness in fruit trees is frequently owing to a luxuriant wood growth. Strong, wood growth is, I fancy, the secret of this correspondent's fruitless orchard. Any expedient that will tend to reduce this vigor of growth will reduce the production of fruit buds. There are a number of plans for bringing trees into bearing which continue to form leaf and twig growth after their bearing age has arrived. A common way to do this is seeding the orchard to grass, which will check the growth of the trees and often induce them to bear fruit. Summer pruning has a tendency to weaken the growth of a tree, and therefore practised to promote fruitfulness. The more the sap is obstructed in its circulation the more likely it will be to produce fruit buds. On this principle many girdle the branches, i. e., take away a ring of bark an inch or two wide about the time the new wood is forming. This last is not to be recommended to other than experts to be done with care or the life of the tree is endangered. Root pruning is another expedient for promoting fruitfulness. For thrifty trees in rich soil that fail to produce fruit, I should seed the soil down to grass, avoid the use of any sort of manures and during the summer cut back with a sharp pocket-knife the young shoots."

MANY people have an idea that a finely flavored dish must cost a great deal. That is a mistake. If you have untainted meat, or sound vegetables, or Indian meal, to begin with, you can make it delicious with proper seasoning. One reason why French cooking is much nicer than any other variety is that it is seasoned with a greater variety of herbs and spices. These cost very little. If you would buy a few cents' worth at a time you would soon have a good assortment. The best kinds are sage, thyme, tarragon, sweet majoram, mint, sweet basil, parsley bay leaves, cloves, mace, celery seed and onions. If you will plant the seed of any of these first mentioned in little boxes on your window sill, or in a sunny spot in the yard, you can generally raise all you need.—Gather and dry them as follows: Parsley and tarragon should be dried in June and July, just before flowering; mint in June and July, thyme, marjoram and savory in July and August; basil and sage in August and September. All herbs should be gathered in the sunshine and dried by artificial heat; their flavor is best preserved by keeping them in air-tight tin cans or in tightly corked glass bottles.

OATMEAL.—Oatmeal, Indian meal and hominy all require two things to make them perfect—that is, plenty of water when first put on to boil and a long time to boil. Have about two quarts of boiling water in a large stewpan, and into it stir one cup of oatmeal which you have already wet with cold water; boil this an hour, stirring often, and then add half a spoonful of salt, and then boil an hour longer. If it should get too stiff add more boiling water; or, if too thin, boil a little longer. You cannot boil too much.

BREAD.—No mistress of a house—we might say no woman in whatever sphere—ought to feel herself thoroughly educated who cannot, at least, superintend the process of bread-making in such style as to produce the resultant of a fair and flaky loaf with which to grace the family board. Good yeast is essential to good bread. The hops should be as fresh as possible. They should be kept in the dark, as they lose their strength in the light.

FILLING a horse's rack with hay, as some persons do, and permitting a constant supply to remain before the animal, is one of the most probable means of producing disease, and the most positive in rendering animals unfit for fast work. Large supplies of hay have the effect of making the stomach large and weak the belly in course of time becoming pendulous. Not only does the stomach increase in capacity, but the large intestines also become enlarged.

POTATOES suffer more from weeds than other crop. One weed will take up and evaporate a good deal of moisture from the soil, and rob the crop of what it greatly needs. This loss of moisture is not often thought of in considering the effects of weeds but it is very important. When too late to be killed by cultivation, the weeds should be hand-pulled.

ATTENTION to little things about the farm, as in any other business, is what increases the profits. Plenty of eggs, a few chickens, a few calves a colt or two help out wonderfully. If some of the perquisites arising are given to the children for the care bestowed they will cheerfully help in the garden, and thus another important item is added to the well-being of the family.

THE raising of sheep is of the greatest benefit to the land, because wherever they feed, new and sweet grasses grow and flourish, and the weeds are destroyed. Farmers should raise turnips and feed them to sheep.

THYME will grow anywhere, but it prefers a dry, poor soil; if the ground is rich the plant will become too luxuriant and lose its aromatic qualities.

DO not be in too much haste to set your hens, unless you have a warm place not only for them to sit in but also for the young chicks after they are hatched.

NEVER feed decayed roots of any kind to cows giving milk. One decayed turnip fed to one cow would affect the milk of fifty cows if mixed together.

THE first one or two litters by pullets are not so good for hatching purposes as those laid later.

MUCK is cooling to the soil in summer and warming in winter.

TWO LOVERS.

BY GEORGE ELIOT.

Two lovers by a moss grown spring;
They leaned soft cheeks together there,
Mingled the dark and sunny hair,
And heard the wooing thrushes sing;
O, budding time!
O, love's best prime!

Two wedded from the portal stept;
The bells made happy carolings,
The air was soft as fanning wings,
While petals on the pathway swept;
O, pure-eyed bride!
O, tender bride!

Two faces o'er a cradle bent;
Two hands above the head were locked;
These pressed each other while they rocked;
These watched a life that love had sent;
O, solemn hour!
O, hidden power!

Two parents by the evening fire;
The red light shone about their knees,
On heads that rose by slow degrees
Like buds upon the lily spire;
O, patient life!
O, tender strife!

The two still sat together there;
The red light shone about their knees,
But all the heads by slow degrees
Had gone and left the lonely pair;
O, voyage fast!
O, vanished past!

The red light shone about the floor,
And made the space between them wide;
And drew their chairs side by side,
Their pale cheeks joined, and said 'Once more!'
O, memories!
O, past that is!

HUMAN NATURE.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

Two little children, five years old,
Marie the gentle, Charlie the bold;
Sweet and bright and quaintly wise,
Angels both, in their mother's eyes.

But you, if you follow my verse, shall see
That they were as human as human can be,
And had not yet learned the maturer art
Of hiding the "self" of the finite heart.

One day they found in their romp and play
Two little rabbits soft and gray—
Soft and gray, and just of a size,
As like each other as your two eyes.

All day long the children made love
To the dear little pets—their treasure-trove;
They kissed and hugged them until the night
Brought to the conies a glad respite.

Too much fondling doesn't agree
With rabbit nature, as we shall see,
For ere the light of another day
Had chased the shadows of night away,

One little pet had gone to the shades,
Or, let us hope, to perennial glades
Brighter and softer than any below—
A heaven where good little rabbits go.

The living and dead lay side by side,
And still alike as before one died,
And it chanced that the children came singly to view
The pets they had dreamed of all the night through.

First came Charlie, and, with sad surprise,
Beheld the dead with streaming eyes;
How'er, consolingly, he said,
"Poor little Marie—her rabbit's dead!"

Later came Marie, and stood aghast;
She kissed and caressed it, but at last
Found voice to say, while her young heart bled,
"I'm sorry for Charlie—his rabbit's dead."

A BEAUTIFUL SENTIMENT.—"A man without some sort of religion is, at best, a poor reprobate, the football of destiny; with no tie linking him to infinity and to the wondrous eternity that is within him; but a woman without it is even worse—a flame without heat, a rainbow without color, a flower without perfume.

"A man may in some sort tie his frail hopes and honors, with weak, shifting ground tackle to his business of the world; but a woman without that anchor which they call faith, is a drift and a wreck. A man may clumsily continue a kind of responsibility or motive, but can find no basis in other system or right action than that of spiritual faith. A man may craze his thoughts and his brain, to thoughtfulness in such poor harborage as Fame and reputation may stretch before; but a woman—where can she put her hope in storms, if not in heaven!

"And that sweet trustfulness—that abiding love, that endearing hope, mellowing every scene of life, lighting them with the pleasant radiance; when the world's cold storms break like an army with smoking cannon—what can bestow it all but a holy soul-tie to what is stronger than an army with cannon? Who that has enjoyed the love of a God-loving mother, but will echo the thought with energy, and hallow it with a tear!"

A Massachusetts lady is reported to have scolded her little boy for taking a drink of water at a hotel. "For," said she, "we pay a dollar for our dinner, and water is very filling."

IT has often been remarked that children will ask questions which even the wisest are puzzled to answer. "Mamma," asked Charlie, "how big was I when you was a little girl?"

A Dutchman about to make a journey to his fatherland, and wishing to say "good-bye" to a friend, extended his hand and said, "Vell, off I ton't come back, hullo."

"WHAT is your wife's particular little game?" asked a friend of a hen-pecked husband. "When she gets thoroughly mad," he answered, "it's draw poker."

"WELL, wife, you can't say that I ever contracted bad habits."

"No, sir, you generally expand them."

THE man who thinks the boy who lives next door to him is a good boy has not been found.

IT requires a man of considerable push to earn his living with a wheelbarrow.

Charles Nelson, Esq., Proprietor of the Nelson House, speaking to us recently, observed: I suffered so much with Rheumatism that my arm withered, and physicians could not help me. I was in despair of my life, when some one advised me to try St. Jacobs Oil. I did so, and as if by magic, I was instantly relieved, and, by the continued use of the Oil, entirely cured. I thank heaven for having used this wonderful remedy, for it saved my life. It also cured my wife.
