Farm and Household.

SEEDING WHEAT.

As September is here, which reminds us that the leaves are about to turn yellow, farmers will soon be plowing wheat land. The most important thing about wheat-growing is getting the seed in the ground. It is a common practice, much to be condemned, of putting off the seeding of wheat until the last moment. The contrary direction should be followed, and instead of deferring seed-sowing until all other work is done, there should be an endeavor to get the seed in by the first of October.

In the first place plow deeply, not less than six inches, and, if possible, on stiff, clay lands let the subsoil plow be used. This answers two purposes. It opens the land deeply, letting down the excess of water when we are visited by heavy rains and allows the roots to penetrate easily to secure a firm hold. Sow early, for then the plants have time to bed themselves and secure a firm foundation against the action of frosts, which throw the plants up when the land thaws in the spring. Wheat that has been in the ground long enough to secure a good root-hold is at least over the greatest difficulty, and it is only those who have made the mistake of sowing late that have been the heaviest sufferers.

The seed should be carefully selected. As we prize "fresh blood" in live stock, so should we change seed in order to get the best results. There have been many new varieties introduced of late that are worthy of a trial, but such should be tried on a small scale before making it general. Certain kinds are adapted to particular localities, and the farmer's experience should guide him in that respect. But under no circumstances should seed be sown that has not passed a complete inspection.

In England, when they wish to avoid cockle or other noxious weeds the seed is brought into the house and the whole family are employed for weeks in picking over it carefully and rejecting every unsound or imperfect grain, frequently using a magnifying glass to facilitate the operation. In this countty we cultivate on too large a scale to use such means, but, however, as there is considerable time during evenings between now and October the spare time might be profitably spent in overlooking the seed. The utmost care is necessary, and future labor will be saved thereby.

Wheat should follow corn or root crops, as they require clean cultivation, and the wheat will be less liable to competition from weeds. Harrow the wheat as soon as it is well up, and also again in the spring.—Drilling is preferable to broadcasting, and the roller can advantageously be used where the land is lumpy or clogged.

Did it ever occur to farmers that wheat can be cultivated with profit? We have the authority of the Patent Office Report on Agriculture that an Englishman planted wheat one foot apart each way, manured and used the hoe on it, with a return of over 100 bushels to the acre. This does not seem credible, but there is not doubt the cultivation of wheat would pay in the increased yield by such a method, as is evinced by the effects of frequent harrowing.

It is recommended, if a good yield is desired, to sow early, select the plumpest and cleanest seed, harrow as often as possible and manure well.

With good preparation of the land, and extra care and judgment in seeding, the farmer need not fear next year's performance with his wheat crop.

Green corn, as soon as the grain begins to harden, is the very best fattening food available to the general farmer for feeding swine. The pigs eat it with a peculiar relish, and will grow and fatten upon it with surprising rapidity. No food is equal to this for fattening pigs in good "show condition" for the fairs.

To kill bushes along fences and elsewhere, where not wanted, cut them down often during the growing season. The cutting back then seems to be more effectual than at other times. Nothing makes a farm look worse than to see bushes growing along fences and in other places.

We see it stated that Mr. Oliver Beirne of Monroe county, West Virginia, recently shipped to New York one hundred and twenty head of three-year-old cattle, which averaged one thousand five hundred and sixty pounds per head.

At this season of the year, do not let stock graze the pasture too close. Feed hay, or, what is better and cheaper, fodder-corn, and provide an abundance of pure, fresh water and shade from mid-day sun.

Watch your colts' hoofs, and see they are pared as often as necessary. The hoof is not only thus benefited, but the action of the animal frequently improved.

Pennsylvania yields one-fifth of the rye produced in the country.—The annual produce in that State ranges between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 bushels.

Bone dust is a good dressing for lawns. Put on plenty of it. Stable manure is often an eye-sore unless very fine.

Pigs profit by a good run on clover or fresh grass. When slaughtered, they should weigh a pound for each day they are old.

Farmers should put back to the ground every year as much as they take from it.

A run in the pasture at night will be benefical for a working team.

Give milk cows extra food as soon as signs of falling off are seen.

In New Hampshire they do not consider it the off year for apples. There will be a large crop.

A colored Press Association met in Chicago last week, eighteen papers being represented.

DORRIS'S SPINNING.

AN OLD-TIME BALLAD.

She sat at the upper chamber—
'Twas a summer of long ago—
And looked through the gable window
At the river that ran below,
And over the quiet pastures,
And up at the wide blue sky,
And envied the jay his freedom
As he lazily flitted by.

Yet patiently at her spinning,
In a halo of happy light,
She wrought, though a shimmer rippled
The heads of the wheat in sight—
Though the garden was spilling over
Its cups on the fragrant air,
And the hollyhocks at the doorway
Had never looked half so fair.

She saw, as her wheel kept whirling,
The leisure of Nature too—
The beautiful holiday weather
Left nothing for her to do,
The cattle were idly grazing,
And even the frisky sheep,
Away in the distant meadows,
Lay under the shade asleep.

So sitting, she heard sweet laughter,
And a bevy of maidens fair,
With a bubble of merry voices,
Come climbing the chamber stair;
"O Dorris! how can you bear it,
To drone at your spinning here?
Why, girl! it's the heart of summer,
The goldenest time of year!

Put out of your hand the distaff,
This wearisome whirl relax—
There are things that are gayer, Dorris,
Than sitting and spinning flax;
Come with us away to the forest;
When it rains is the time to ply
Such tiresome tasks—and to-day is
The fifteenth day of July!"

With a face that was softly saddened,
Sweet Dorris looked up and said,
As she ravelled a bit of tangle,
And twisted again her thread,
"Nay, nay, I must do my spinning!
It wouldn't be kind or right
That the loom should be kept a-waiting;
My hanks must be done to-night.

Aye surely the day is lovely!
It tugs at my very heart
To look at its drifting beauty,
Nor share in its joy my part;
I may not go forth to meet it,
But the summer is kind, you see,
And I think as I sit at my spinning—
I think it will come to me."

So the frolicsome maidens left her,
With something of mild surprise
That Dorris should choose a duty,
With pleasure before her eyes;
Not dreaming that when her mother,
Her "dozens" should count up-stairs,
And kiss her hand and say "My darling!"
Her day would be glad as theirs.

So she minded her wheel, and blithely
She sang as she twirled it round,
And cunningly from her fingers
The delicate fibre wound;
And on through the sunny hours,
That neither were sad nor long,
She toiled in her sweet obedience,
And lightened her toil with song.

(She sings.)

"Come hither, happy birds,
With warbling woo me,
Till songs that have no words
Melt through and through me!
Come, bees, and drop and rise
Within the clover,
Where yellow butterflies
Go glancing over!
O roses, red and white,
And lilies, shining
Like golden goblets bright
With silver lining—
Each to my window send
Gifts worth the winning,
To cheer me as I bend
Above my spinning!

O ripples on the sand,
That break in beauty,
O pines, that stiffly stand
Like guards on duty.
Green meadows, where, this morn,
The scythes were mowing,
Soft slopes, where o'er the corn
The wind is blowing,
White clouds above the hill
That sail together,
Rich summer scents, that fill
This summer weather—
All bring the sweets you've found
Since morn's beginning,
And come and crowd them round
My day of spinning!"

—Margaret J Preston, in Wide Awake.

FRANK MARTIN, a handsome young murderer, was under sentence of death in the jail at Leclede, Mo. Time hung heavily on his hands, and for diversion he wrote tender notes to the sheriff's daughter, Maggie. She did not reply to the first half dozen, and he was on the point of ceasing to write when he was surprised by a sentimental missive. Their lovemaking progressed rapidly thereafter, and of course they soon began to plot for Frank's escape. One night the girl unlocked his cell, and he saw that she was in boy's clothes with her hair close cropped. She put pistols in his hands, led him out of the prison to where two saddled horses were in readiness, and together they rode away. This happened last November. The pair have just been caught in Tennessee, where they had married under assumed names and settled down to farming.

"A great many of us," says Clara Belle, in the Cincinnati Enquirer, "are coming back to town to get married. The flirtations of July became serious intentions in August, and matrimonial engagements in September, with weddings prospective for October, November and December." She adds that the fashionable girl, having settled the comparatively minor matter of choosing a husband, now turns her heartfelt attention to getting herself satisfactorily dressed for marriage, also to bettering her person. "She desires above all things to be at least pretty, if not beautiful, on the awful occasion, and to accomplish that purpose she goes through all the rejuvenation possible." The writer says that the system adopted by wise affianced wives is a nourishing diet, plenty of exercise, and long, regular hours of sleep, for these improve her appearance by improving her health.

Since January, Chicago has had 619 cases of small pox.

A Chicago Broker's Happy Investment.

Lewis H. O'Conor, Esq., whose office is located at 93 Washington street, this city, lately related the following in the hearing of one of our reporters as an evidence of special good fortune. I have been suffering, said Mr. O'Conor, for a number of weeks with a very severe pain in my back, believed to be from the effects of a cold contracted while on the lakes. I had been prescribed for by several of our physicians and used various remedies. Three days ago, I abandoned them all, and bought a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, applied it at night before retiring, and to-day feel like a new man. I experienced almost instant relief and now feel no pain whatever.
