Farm and Household.

WORK OF A FARMER'S WIFE.

I am a farmer's daughter, and a farmer's wife, and know how many hours of hard labor we have to perform from one year's end to another. also know the ways and means contrived by ourselves to obtain a little pocket money which we may use as we please—not to spend "loafing 'round," but for the comfort of our homes. Still, with all the toil of a farm life, I would not exchange it for a life in town with double the income. Now, let me tell you some of the hard-working members of the Home how I have obtained quite a revenue the two past seasons. The head of the family said I could have all the poultry I could raise, but at the same time added that it would be time and trouble thrown away. I had turkeys and hens. The first year I had poor success on account of storms and accidents. The second sold twenty-six dollars worth of eggs, and received over eighty dollars in the fall for my poultry, and did not get fancy prices. The third season (last summer and fall) I sold thirty-eight dollars worth of eggs, and my turkeys brought forty dollars. When I add that I did all the household work on a large farm, often milking, feeding hogs, and not one minute's help even in threshing time, you will acknowledge the money was well earned, but, as I look around the house, and see what comforts it has brought I wonder how I got along without them. Every dollar was used for something that would benefit the whole family, except a trifle given to some one whom I knew to be very needy. I find that young turkeys must have black pepper mixed with their food. It is also well to give a trifle of red pepper. Give them corn meal after they are ten days old, but scald it in sour milk, in a kettle kept for the purpose. If they are cooped up their coops must be moved every day or they will die. If young turkeys have a turkey mother, she will be apt to keep them dry through quite a storm. When they are reared with a hen they must be furnished with shelter when it rains. Now, how many rosy lasses in the Home circle are going to volunteer to rise at five o'clock every morning from now till the first day of June next, and prepare breakfast with her own hands while tired mother naps?

KIND TREATMENT OF HORSES.

It has been observed by experienced horse trainers that naturally vicious horses are rare, and that among those that are properly trained and kindly treated when colts they are the exception.

It is superfluous to say that a gentle and docile horse is always the more valuable, other qualities being equal, and it is almost obvious that gentle treatment tends to develop this admirable quality in the horse as well as in the human species, while harsh treatment has the contrary tendency. Horses have been trained so as to be governed by the words of his driver, and they will obey and perform their simple but important duties with as much alacrity as the child obeys the direction of the parent.

It is true that all horses are not equally intelligent and tractable, but it is probable that there is less difference among them in this regard than there is among his human masters, since there are many incitements and ambitions among men that do not effect animals.

The horse learns to know and to have confidence in a gentle driver, and soon discovers how to secure for himself that which he desires, and to understand his surroundings and his duties. The tone, volume, and inflection of his master's voice indicate much, perhaps more than the words that are spoken. Soothing tones rather than words calm him if excited by fear or anger, and angry and excited tones tend to excite or anger him. In short bad masters make bad horses.—Scientific American.

Cleanliness in Milking.—The manner of milking in the Channel Islands, the home of the Alderney, is peculiar, and has the merit of cleanliness, at least. Milking and straining the milk are done at one operation. The milk-maid with her tin pail, linen strainer and sea-shell proceeds to the pasture. Seating herself beside the cow, she thus completes her arangements. The strainer is securely tied over the narrow-mouthed bucket, and placing the large shallow shed on the strainer she vigorously directs the streams into the shell; overflowing the shallow brim, the milk passes through the strainer into the receptacle beneath, the shell being used simply to prevent wearinw a hole in the linen strainer.

"This butter, Mr. Spicer," said the dealer, "carried off the prize at the farmers' fair," and Seth spat out a taste of the compound, and remarked: "Unless the prize was a ship's anchor and chain cable I should think the butter could have carried it off easily."

Cheap Indian Pudding.—Stir gradually half a pint of Indtan meal to a quart of boiling milk or water; add a tablespoonful of salt and one of ginger, a teacupful of chopped suet or half as mach butter, half a nutmeg grated, one egg, a teacupful of sugar or molasses; bake two hours.

Cure for Frosted Feet.—Take wood ashes, say one quart, salt one half pint; put in a bucket, pour a gallon of hot water on it; put your feet into it and bathe until the water is nearly cold. Do that before you retire; do it before the affected part breaks open. One treatment is, in most cases, enough. This is cheap and sure.

Baked Hominy Grits.—One quart of milk, one cupful of hominy, two eggs and a little salt; salt the milk and boil for twenty minutes; set aside and fully cool, beat eggs to a stiff froth, and add hominy. Bake half an hour.

Gargle for Sore Throat.—One teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, one teaspoonful of salt, one pint of water, 2 tablespoonfuls of vinegar; sweeten to taste with honey or loaf sugar. Mix together and bottle.

TO A SKULL.

Turn your face this way;
I'm not weary of it;
Every hour of every day
More and more I love it:
Grinning in that jolly guise
Of bare bones and empty eyes.

Was this hollow dome
Where I tap my finger,
Once the spirit's narrow home—
Where you loved to linger,
Hiding, as to-day are we,
From the self-same destiny?

O'er and o'er again
Have I put the query:
Was existence all in vain
That you look so cheery?
Death of such a benefit
That you smile to think of it?

Did your throbbing brow
Tire of the flutter
Of such fancyings as now
You, at last, may utter
In that grin so grimly bland
-Only death can understand?

Has the shallow glee
Of old dreams of pleasure
Left you ever wholly free
To float out, at leisure,
O'er the shoreless, trackless trance
Of unsounded circumstance?

Only this I read
In your changeless features·
You, at least, have gained a meed
Held from living creatures;
You have naught to ask. Beside,
You do grin so satisfied!

DON'T TAKE IT TO HEART.

There's many a trouble
Would break like a bubble,
And into the water of Lethe depart,
Did we not rehearse it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And give it a permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish to-morrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings;
So sadly intruding,
And quietly brooding,
It hatches out all sorts of horrible things.

How welcome the seeming
Of looks that are beaming,
Whether one's wealthy or whether one's poor;
Eyes bright as a berry,
Cheeks red as a cherry,
The groan, and the grief, and the heartache can cure.

Resolve to be merry,
All worry to ferry
Across the tamed waters that bid us forget,
And no longer fearful,
But happy and cheerful,
We feel life has much that's worth living for yet.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

To discover a truth and to separate it from a falsehood is surely an occupation worthy of the best intellect, and not at all unworthy of the best heart.

Our good deeds rarely cause much gossip among our fellow-citizens, but our evil ones leap immediately into notority.

It is better to meet danger than to wait for it. He that is on a lee shore, and foresees a hurricane, stands out to sea and encounters a storm to avoid a shipwreck.

Neither worth nor wisdom come without an effort; and patience, and piety, and salutary knowledge, spring up and ripen from under the harrow of affliction.

Small miseries like small debts hit us in so many places, and meet us at so many turns and corners, that what they want in weight they make up in number, and render it less hazardous to stand the fire of one cannon ball than a volley composed of such a shower of bullets.

A young gentleman who is very particular about the getting up of his linen wrote a note to his laundress, and at the same time sent one to the object of his affections. Unfortunately, he put the wrong address on the envelopes and posted them. The woman was puzzled but not in the least offended; but when the young lady read "If you rumple up my shirt-bosoms and drag the button off the collar any more, as you did last time, I shall have to go somewhere else," she cried all the evening and declared she would never speak to him again.

Capt. Meyer of the German schooner Phœnix, at Callao, reports that he has discovered a new island in latitude 7 degrees and 48 minutes south, and longitude 83 degrees and 48 minutes west, about 100 miles west of Punta Aguja, the nearest land. It is said to be of volcanic origin, about fifty feet high at its greatest elevation, and is one square mile in extent. The British ship Kingfisher and the United States steamer Alaska have gone to verify the discovery.

That fishing, as an industrial occupation, ranks very high in France is shown by the fact that a little decked vessel of twenty-five tons belonging to the port of Croisic, has earned during the last five years upward of 74,000 francs, after paying expenses, of which the owner got 23,421, or at the rate of 4,700 francs per annum—a very handsome interest for his outlay.

Blackjack is a Missouri town of some sentiment, notwithstanding its name, for it has just had an elopement, involving a furious pursuit of the flying pair by the girl's father on horseback, a charge of shot fired scatteringly into their backs, a runaway by all the scared horses, a fight between the two men, and the final triumph of the lovers.

Mc Pherson of Toledo had been a hard drinker for many years when his wife, on her deathbed, made him solemnly pledge himself ro total abstinence. After three days without alcohol he gave up the struggle; yet he would not break his vow, and suicide became his desperate resort.

One intoxicated man said it was a bundle of rags that lay on a window sill 200 yards away, at Austin, Texas, and his companion said it was a woman's head. They made a bet, and decided it by shooting at the object; but neither won for it was a boy's head which the bullet grazed.
