WIT, HUMOR AND WISDOM.

"BLESSED IS HE WHO CAN UNDERSTAND A JOKE, FOR VERILY THERE BE SOME WHO KNOW NOT A JOKE WHEN THEY SEE IT."
—A more or less ancient proverb.

'How long have you been married?' asked the clerk at the hotel desk, as the elderly bridegroom registered.

'Two weeks,' replied the happy man.

'Front!' cried the clerk; 'show the gentleman to parlor B—$15 a day, sir.'

'Third wife,' calmly said the guest.

'Oh, excuse me. Front show the gentleman to 824 back. Take the elevator; $4 a week, sir.'—Anon.

Gilhooly strolled into a fashionable Austin church last Sunday just before the service began. The sexton followed him up, and tapping him on the shoulder and pointing to a small cur that had followed him into the sacred edifice, said:

'Dogs are not admitted.'

'That's not my dog,' responded Gilhooly.

'But he follows you.'

'Well, so do you.'

The sexton growled, and removed the animal without unnecessary violence.—Texas Siftings.

'So you have been fighting on your way home from school!'

'Y-yes sir.'

'Didn't I tell you that this sort of business had got to stop?'

'Yes, pa, but—'

'No excuses, sir! You probably provoked the quarrel!'

'Oh, no! no! He called me names!'

'Names? What of it? When a boy calls you names walk along about your business. Take off that coat!'

'But he didn't call me names!'

'Oh, he didn't? Take off that vest!'

'When he called me names I never looked at him, but when he pitched into you I—I had to fight!'

'What! Did he call me names?'

'Lots of 'em, father! He said you lied to your constituents, and went back on the caucus and had—!'

'William, put on your coat and vest, and here's a nickel to buy peanuts! I don't want you to come up a slugger, and I wish you to stand well with your teacher, but if you can lick that boy who says I ever bolted a regular nomination or went back on my end of the ward, don't be afraid to sail in!'—Detroit Free Press.

'Miss M——, may I ask you a very important question?' said a bashful young man to a young lady to whom he had been paying some attention for some time, and he spoke in the most uneasy, sepulchral voice imaginable.

'Why,' said the young lady, somewhat startled at the solemn turn of affairs, 'I don't know that there would be any serious objections if you have an important question to ask.'

'Well,' drawing a little closer and in a more confidential whisper, 'do you think this a propitious time?'

'There's no one near to hinder that I see,' was the coquettish answer, as the young lady glanced about the room.

'And do you—do you think that—that you could grant the request?'

'Why, really, Mr. ——, how can you expect me to answer before I know the question?'

'Yes—true—really—well I—well—'

'Well, what?' with just the slightest impatience in her voice.

'Well, you see, I had been thinking for some time that if—if there was really no objection, I would like to ask you with what—what sort of powder you clean your teeth. I had noticed how nicely—' but the slamming of the door as the young lady whisked out of the room broke short his sentence, and, after awaiting her return for fifteen minutes, he took his hat in mild surprise and wandered homeward. The next day he told his most intimate friend that Miss M—— was 'a little off' the night before, but he could n't think of anything he had said or done to offend her.—Anon.

'Is this an editor?'

The horse reporter looked up from a little idyl on the life and career of Rysdyk's Hambletonian into which he had been putting the best efforts of his surging brain, and beheld a rather short young man who was peering in an affable but somewhat irresolute manner over a very high collar, and on whose upper lip was a delicate tracery which looked as if it might have been effected with some No. 2 molasses, and at which the young man was making furtive grasps with the thumb and forefinger of his right hand, evidently under the impression that he had a moustache and desired to pull it.

'I want to see an editor,' said the young man in a voice that sounded like the best efforts of a cricket, 'about a social topic—I want to see the social topics editor.'

'What sort of a social topic is it that's worrying you?' inquired the biographer of St. Julien. 'There are a good many social topics. Has somebody in your social circle been holding three aces with criminal frequency, or has the green-eyed monster invaded your once happy flat because your wife goes to the matinee?'

'Oh, it's nothing like that,' said the young man. 'I promised papa that I would never play poker, and I'm not married—that is, not yet.'

'Well, the gentle sex is having one lucky winter, anyhow,' said the horse reporter, surveying the visitor carefully. 'If you'll quit grabbing for that supposititious moustache, and tell me what ails you, perhaps I can settle the point. What's the social topic you are distressed about?'

"Well, you see,' said the young man, 'when I got into the laces—'

'Into the what?'

'Into the laces—the lace department in our store, you know—all the other fellows there were real jealous of me because I had been out more in society than they had. I belong to three clubs on the West Side, and we have hops, and assemblies, and things every week, so I'm really quite in the swim, you know. Well, they were awfully jealous, you know—just as I said—and they talked real mean. I told Cholly about it—Cholly's my chum, you know—and he said to never mind them, but keep going right into society; and he lent me his mauve pants for an awfully swell reception one night last week. Cholly and I are awful chums, and I'm going to give him a book mark on his birthday. That will be nice, won't it?'

'Yes,' said the horse reporter, 'a book mark is a valuable aid to any young man who is hustling around to get a living. With a strong arm, pure heart, and a nice book mark, fortune is within the reach of all. But what's the question that's worrying you?'

'Oh, yes, the social topic. 'Well, the other day a lot of us were talking about young ladies, and I said that very few young men knew what real etiquette was, and I gave an awfully severe look at one fellow who has been terribly jealous of me ever since a young lady who came into the store the other day smiled right over in the direction where I was standing, and never even looked at him. And then some one said it was proper to call on a young lady and ask her to accompany you to the theatre that evening. I said that would be wrong—that the correct way was to write the lady a note asking the pleasure of her company. We had a terrible discussion about it, and finally agreed to leave it to the social topics editor of the Tribune. Now, supposing you were a young lady, and I were to call at your papa's house and ask you to go to the theatre with me that evening, what would you do?'

'Suppose I were a young lady?' said the horse reporter.

'Yes.'

'And you were to call and ask me to go to the theatre with you?'

'Yes.'

'What would I do?'

'Yes.'

'Well, if somebody had mislaid the gun I suppose I should have to content myself with a club.'—Chicago Tribune.
