The Local Option Law.

We understand that petitions have been sent to the Legislature by both the friends and the opponents of the local option law, from this county. The friends of the law claim that the penalties inflicted for its violation are not stringent enough to compel a proper respect for the law. We understand that they are asking that its violation be made a penitentiary offense together with other alterations that may insure a proper enforcement of the law.

On the other hand, the opponents of the law claim that it has been tried and found a failure; that it does not prevent the sale of intoxicating drink, but encourages a violation of and a disrespect for law. They therefore ask that it be repealed, and a high license law be enacted instead.

It is a difficult matter for our members of the General Assembly to obtain a knowledge of the sentiments of the people from petitions. And, while we should deplore the bitterness and personal feeling that would be stirred up from making the local option question again a campaign issue, yet the only fair way of determining whether or not the people desire the abolition of the law is to submit the matter again to a vote of the people.

A Proper Union.

Gov. McLane is reported to favor the purpose of consolidating fish propagation with the protection of and propagation of oysters. The plan we think is a good one. Certainly the fish commissioners under the old plan have accomplished nothing, if Kent county rivers may be taken as criterions. If it is possible to make fish abundant by artificial propagation, the State should undertake the matter in an an efficient manner, and upon a scale large enough to accomplish real benefit. Under the present system we have no doubt but that the fish commissioners have drawn their salaries with great promptness, but if they have made two fish grow where only one grew before, we have never seen the evidence of it outside their annual reports. The fish and oyster interests naturally go together, and one efficient organization that should attend to both interests would be proper and fitting.

WE ARE SORRY TO NOTE that the Day of Baltimore has stopped publishing its morning edition.—With last Monday's issue it terminated its brief career. The Day, during its six-week existence, was a good paper, and we really thought it had come to stay. We are surprised that its publication should have been begun with the belief that it could be made a success in six weeks, and with the alternative of going under if it did not attain success in that time, Generally speaking a successful newspaper is a result of growth and not of a spasmodic effort, however brilliant the effort may be. There are certainly some noted exceptions to this rule within the past few years, but Baltimore has had such an experience in spasmodic newspapers, that any new aspirant to public favor should start prepared to sustain itself unaided through a considerable period of probation. By the first of January, 1885, we believe the Day would have developed into a success. In this part of Maryland it was looked upon as filling a want, and if it had lived, we believe would have met with numerous friends.

QUEEN VICTORIA has published another book. It is simply a diary of her daily life and of the sayings and doings of her children and servants. It is interesting only as it reveals to the world the personality of the ruler of a great nation. The book reveals the Queen as a very kind-hearted, domestic, motherly sort of person who is but the counterpart of ten thousand other matrons in England, who are not queens. It is quite probable, at least if the extracts given from her book may be taken as a criterion, that she bothers her head very little about international questions, but takes a much more lively interest in the condition of one of her grandchildren that may have the whooping cough. The late Mr. Disraeli was probably for a long time the actual King of England, and the Hon. Mr. Gladstone is probably now, more than any other individual, the actual ruler of the land.

THE Hon. J. S. C. Blackburn has been elected by the Kentucky Legislature to the United States Senate. There will probably be no State in the Union more ably represented than Kentucky will be by Beck and Blackburn.

THE CAUSE OF A STREET SENSATION.—A fashionably dressed lady fainted shortly before dusk yesterday afternoon corner Baltimore and Holiday streets. Another lady who accompanied her did her best to resuscitate the unconscious woman. In a few minutes a crowd congregated. Lieut. Frazier, of the central district, happened by, and learned from the friend that the lady in the swoon was standing at the corner waiting for a car when a carriage rattled past with a man and woman in it. The lady recognized the man as her husband, and her feelings so overcame her that she fainted. She had to be sent home in a hack.—Balt. Sun.

New York the Battle Ground.

From the Chicago Herald.

Under the new Congressional apportionment the various States will at the next election have four hundred and one electoral votes, of which two hundred and one will be necessary to a choice. Four years ago the following named States gave their votes for Hancock and English:

Alabama	10	Nevada	3
Arkansas	6	New Jersey	9
California	5	North Carolina	10
Delaware	3	South Carolina	7
Florida	4	Tennessee	12
Georgia	11	Texas	8
Kentucky	12	Virginia	11
Louisiana	8	West Virginia	5
Maryland	8
Mississippi	8	Total	155
Missouri	15

By the new apportionment additional votes were given to the above mentioned States as follows:

Arkansas	1	South Carolina	2
California	2	Texas	5
Georgia	1	Virginia	1
Kentucky	1	West Virginia	1
Missouri	1
Mississippi	1	Total	17
North Carolina	1

Adding this increased vote to that cast in 1880 gives the strength of the Democrats in the electoral college at 172, which, with the thirty-six votes of New York State, would make 208, a clear majority of seven.

In this enumeration the only State not certainly Democratic is New York, while not included in it are Indiana and Connecticut, which are quite as likely to be Democratic as Republican. Beyond this it would be idle for the Democrats to look. They might carry all the States first named, and Indiana and Connecticut as well, but, losing New York, they would be defeated. On the other hand, if they should make New York the battlefield, and stake their hope of success on their ability to carry it, they would, with unobjectionable candidates, have but to retain a State already their own, and the votes of Indiana and Connecticut could be held in reserve to make up for any break which might occur in some less important quarter. The necessity of the Democrats making their campaign in New York is so plain as to require no labored argument to substantiate it. Without that State they cannot win, as the figures show. With it, defeat would be practically out of the question.

The pretense that Ohio can be made a Democratic State this year is idle. Hopes based on that idea will be shattered. The State has never failed to vote for Republican candidates in Presidential elections. It has occasionally been carried by the Democrats in off years, but as regularly as the quadrennial contests have taken place it has returned to its allegiance. New York, on the contrary, when not overwhelmingly Democratic, has always been close, and since the war it has been carried twice by Democrats in Presidential years. Nothing but the unpopularity of Mr. Greeley with the party whose candidate he was prevented the State from declaring against Grantism in 1872 as vehemently as it did in 1876. In no previous contest has the possession of New York been of such vital importance to the Democrats as now, for at no other election in twenty-five years have they had a certainty of enough votes elsewhere to elect their candidates even if they did carry that State. This year they have that certainty.

New York is the one State which the Democrats must make sure of carrying. No party ever found itself confronted on the eve of a national election with a more simple problem. By concentrating their efforts in that direction they can settle the question on ground of their own choosing, and of which they will be in possession at the opening as well as the closing of the campaign.

DORCHESTER OYSTER WAR.

OPERATIONS OF THE STATE NAVAL SQUADRON—TWO ARRESTS.

From the Baltimore Sun.

CRISFIELD, MD., Feb. 10.—Two vessels of the Maryland oyster navy, the Leila and Gov. Hamilton, rendezvoused in Fishing bay, Dorchester county, this afternoon. Their object was to overawe the dredgers, who proved too strong for Capt. Insley, of the police sloop Julia Hamilton, last week. The steamers found the bay deserted by the dredgers, who had gotten wind of their approach. The Leila, Capt. Nichol, left Annapolis Saturday morning and ran down to Poplar Island Narrows, where she spent the night. The Gov. Hamilton, Capt. Gordy, left Baltimore Saturday afternoon. Owing to thick weather the steamer put into Annapolis, where she remained all night. She started again at six o'clock this morning, and when off James Island overhauled the Leila. Both steamers proceeded to Fishing bay, and while in Hooper straits fell in with two schooners, the Martha E. Moore, Capt. Winfield S. Boyer, and the Frank and Murray McNamara, Capt. Samuel T. Cox, in charge of the mate, John Weiser. Both vessels hail from Baltimore, but are owned by Leslin S. McNamara, of Cambridge, Md. They were acting suspiciously when first seen, and the Hamilton, having flung her ensign to the breeze, started for them. In the meantime the rifles were loaded and the decks cleared for action. In the wake of the Hamilton came the Leila, whose men were well armed. The brass 12-pounder in the bow was uncovered. On approaching the two dredgers the Hamilton lay to, and first officer Cooper took the captain's gig and boarded them. The Moore was found with her deck and dredge lines wet, and the presumption was that she had been dredging. On the McNamara the evidences of recent dredging were much stronger, the deck being soiled and partly covered with oysters. The captains were arrested on the charge of dredging on Sunday and their vessels taken in tow by the steamer. The pungy Lady of the Lake, of Crisfield, was also boarded, but as her lines were dry no arrests were made. Entering Goose creek the squadron found the police schooner Julia Hamilton lying at anchor. The dredgers were then cast loose and anchored in the creek, where they will remain all night to await the trial of their captains Monday before Justice Jas. T. Robinson. Capt. Insley, ex-commander of the Julia Hamilton, states that he has been having trouble with the dredgers for some time past, owing to the scarcity of oysters in the bay, and the difficulty of guarding three different lines of demarcation with one sail vessel. The dredgers were also aware that he had inferior arms and a small supply of ammunition. Some time in last December, he says, he attempted to board the schooner Tangier, owned by Joseph Beard, of Baltimore, but the captain and several of the crew met him with hatchets, handspikes and other weapons, and threatened to kill him if he stepped on board. He returned to his schooner, and when he reached her the dredgers opened fire, which he reciprocated. No one was injured on either side. The dredger got away, and no arrests were made. For a month past, violations of the law, especially at night, have been frequent in Tedious creek, a branch of Fishing bay, and a number of arrests have been made. John Richardson, of Nanticoke river, and Silas J. Gray, of Gray's Island, were fined fifty dollars, which they paid. Martin Booze, of Cambridge, and Henry Wise Mills, of Strait's district, Dorchester county, were fined about three weeks ago, but took an appeal. At the same time Milburn Cannon, of Strait's district, was seen by Captain Insley dredging in forbidden waters, and an attempt was made to arrest him. His brother, Sylvester Cannon, it is charged, threatened to shoot Capt. Insley if he boarded Milburn's boat, and drove him off. A week later Jas. L. Cannon, tonger, volunteered to assist Insley in arresting Milburn Cannon, and while he was absent in the discharge of that duty, his canoe, anchored in shoal water, was run over by Sylvester Cannon's pungy, sunk and rendered useless. Milburn Cannon was tried and fined $50, but appealed. The father of the two Cannons, R. P. Cannon, who is said to be the chief of the terrorists and the "El Mahdi" of the oyster rebellion, went to Crisfield, and there, it is said, procured three repeating rifles and ammunition. On his return, Monday last, the Cannons started with their two boats from their home, off Fox creek, on a dredging expedition, firing a salute as they departed by way of warning to the police boat and the tongmen. On reaching the dredging ground they anchored, and as soon as the breeze sprang up began operations and continued to work all night. The oyster police boat, which was in charge of Jerome A. Robinson, mate, was stationed about a hundred yards away, and shortly after they had anchored the dredgers opened fire in her direction, their balls falling 100 yards away. This drove Insley off. That night a meeting of tongmen of the neighborhood was held, at which the resignations of Capt. Insley and his crew were presented, and two delegates appointed to proceed to Annapolis and ask for help in beating off the "pirates." These delegates, James T. Robinson and George C. Insley, returned on the Governor Hamilton from Annapolis to-day. The tongmen are jubilant over the arrival of the Leila and Hamilton, and to night a fleet of their canoes gathered around the steamers. Capt. Gordy delivered five rifles and a supply of ammunition to the Julia Hamilton, whose new captain, George H. Roberts, will take command in a day or two. The Governor Hamilton arrived at Crisfield this evening, and will return to the scene of trouble Monday. The Leila remained on the ground guarding the prizes. Both steamers will probably join in a raid to morrow on the Cannons, who are alleged to be the ring-leaders. Several years ago Sylvester Cannon was shot and seriously wounded by Capt. Job Travers, of the police sloop Carrie E. Franklin. R. P. Cannon was magistrate four years ago, but has himself been arrested several times for illegal dredging. Capt. Bertie Jones, Moses E. Pritchett and others are also said to be among the intimidators.

SHERMAN AT WORK.

WASHINGTON, February 10.

Whatever John Sherman does now relates to the Chicago nomination. Cold, calculating and ambitious, he makes no mistakes. When he offered the "outrage resolutions" people wondered. When they came up for consideration in the Senate Sherman and Mahone stood together. The Virginia delegates were in the resolutions. Those of other States were in view. Sherman, not Arthur, will have them Mahone was in search of support from a positive man—a man of will for an ally; a man of courage and not too scrupulous for a leader, if he must follow, and in John Sherman he has found him. There never have been the relations between Mahone and Arthur that have been represented. Mahone was in a struggle that had for its possible outcome a great State. He was willing that Arthur should have the benefit of whatever would be of service to him or his administration. In return he asked only for the degree of confidence and support to which so much entitled him. Arthur accepted the offer without acknowledging the relation. Mahone felt this, but could not help himself. Despite the representations of Mahone's freedom to use the administration and the alliance with Arthur, whatever he received from Arthur or the administration he helped himself to. He took what he wanted whenever and wherever he found it. Arthur never did anything except at Mahone's demand. There never was an alliance between Arthur and Mahone. A great delusion has existed about this. Mahone has always felt that he was a poor relation at the White House. As expert an actor as Arthur is, he was never able to disguise this. In the death-struggle last fall Mahone complained that he was not supported as he should be. He fought for all he obtained and obtained but little more than he could not be prevented from taking

The words put in Riddleberger's mouth, "We are for Arthur because Arthur is for us," were never spoken. That was a myth. It was a false report, deliberately made, perhaps, with not a particle of truth lying back of it. Neither of the Virginia Senators ever felt that Arthur was for them or their cause, except so far as it profited him. They knew that he was not, in the sense that men are for others, to sink or swim together. The votes of the Virginia Senators were important to the administration, but nobody knew better than Mahone how Arthur constantly tried to get on without them, and if he must seek their help how begrudgingly it was requited. If Arthur has believed that after keeping Mahone standing out in the cold he could call him to fetch the Virginia delegates for him to Chicago, he will find out his error if he has not already done so. Virginia will be for John Sherman at Chicago. Mahone is as cold, calculating and as bold, if not as ambitious, as Sherman, and he is the kind of man to go the farthest in rewarding Sherman for standing with him in those ceremonies in the Senate which were as the funeral obsequies to Mahone's cause in Virginia.

Not for Virginia only is the alliance between Sherman and Mahone, but for the South as a whole. The Presidential plan of John Sherman gradually unfolds.—Philadelphia Times.

THE AWAKENED SOUTH.

THE REAL CAUSE OF THE DEPRESSION IN THE NEW ENGLAND MILLS.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Feb. 6.—The song of the bluebird is heard in the land, and on every hand is heard the note of preparation for spring planting. Year by year the farmers are increasing the area of lands cultivated, diversifying their crops, using more and a better class of machinery, and improving their farms and their condition generally. Tariffs, railroad freights, and overproduction do not give the true reason for the depression of New England manufactures. Development in the South furnishes the secret. Her people are paying less attention to politics, and more to their material interests. They are diversifying their industries, and, instead of remaining almost solely an agricultural people, they are turning their attention largely to manufacturing

In ante-bellum days the South relied upon New England for many of the necessary articles she consumed, while she contented herself with producing the raw material from which they were made. Her people are becoming more economical and thrifty, and she now manufactures many articles for home consumption, while she ships and profitably competes in the markets of the world with many classes of goods that she heretofore received from abroad. In former times she bought largely of shoes of New England make. Now almost every Southern State has its shoe manufactories with the latest improved machinery.

In the manufacture of cotton yarns and many grades of cloth the Southern mills now rival those of New England. The policy of bringing the mills to the cotton is proving eminently successful, as is evidenced by the number of factories springing up all over the South. This section was once one of the most profitable customers of the New England mills; but all this is changed now. The new South is manufacturing much for herself. These mills are running short time.

The South, too, is becoming the seat of many of the minor manufactures which were heretofore unknown to her, and all of which are proving successful and profitable. In a few years more she will be dependent on the North and East only for certain classes of goods, and for fine machinery. The South and Southwest will become the great manufacturing centres. Climate, abundance of raw material, and other advantages render this inevitable. C.

COL. OCHILTREE'S ROMANCE.

THE TEXAS HERO, VANQUISHED AT LAST, ACCEPTS THE SITUATION IN GOOD FAITH.

From the Hartford Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—Representative Tom Ochiltree is at last to marry a fortune. The Roaring Red-headed Ranger of the Rio Grande, whose bonhomie makes everybody his friend, is soon, it is said, to marry Miss Eva Mackay, the adopted daughter of John W. Mackay, the Pacific coast millionaire.—Among his friends Mr. Ochiltree makes no concealment of the fact of his approaching marriage. Miss Mackay, as is well known, has resided with her mother in Paris for four or five years. During that time all kinds of royal grandees have paid court to her and her share of her father's $75,000,000; but in each and every case she has plainly indicated that she did not want them, and they quietly picked up their hats and left.

A gentleman, who claims to know all about it, says the Texas Representative met John W. Mackay several years since, when a conversation sprang up about marriage.—Mackay remarked, in a familiar way, slapping the genial Tom on the back, 'Tom, you are getting old enough now, why don't you get married?'

Tom replied, 'I can't find a lady who will have me.'

There was much talk, and Ochiltree put in: 'By the way, Mackay, you have a little girl over in Paris, I would like to marry her.'

'Well,' said Mackay, 'you have my consent, and if you get her's it will be all right.' Mr. Ochiltree spent six weeks at the Mackay palace in Paris last summer. He wooed and won her.

The only difficulty in this interesting story is that Ochiltree is himself the author of it. The ordinary public look upon him as the prince of American truth wrestlers. At the same time, his many friends would be exceedingly pleased to know that Miss Mackay got such a sensible husband, and that Tom himself got such a rich wife.

To Fire the Northern Heart.

WASHINGTON, February 10.—The Senatorial committee of investigation of Southern outrages will leave for New Orleans on Tuesday. The Deputy Sergeant at Arms who attends the committee has already proceeded to Copiah county, Mississippi, with a list of witnesses who are to be summoned before the committee. Senator Frye has devoted considerable attention to the alleged Mississippi outrages and claims to have a complete record of the cases which have occurred there during the last three years. The Yazoo matter is not one to which especial attention is to be paid, but may come in for a share. It is Copiah county which is to be the scene of committee work. Senators Fry and Hoar assert that when the full extent of the deviltry in Mississippi is known it will have the effect to fire the Northern heart. In order to make sure of getting it effectively before the country the committee will take along its own special reporter, who is also clerk of the committee.
