WIT, HUMOR AND WISDOM.

"BLESSED IS HE WHO CAN UNDERSTAND A JOKE, FOR VERILY THERE BE SOME WHO KNOW NOT A JOKE WHEN THEY SEE IT."
—A more or less ancient proverb.

'How's business?' asked a gentleman in Pittsqurgh, of a prominent glass manufacturer of that city.

'Immense!' was the reply: 'we are fairly rushed to death; have got orders ahead clear up to August.'

'Is that so?' was the surprised question. 'What line of goods are you at work upon?'

'Diamond breastpins for summer hotel clerks.' —Anon.

They were standing at the front gate.

'Won't you come in the parlor and sit a little while, George, dear?'

'N-no, I guess not,' replied George, hesitatingly.'

'I wish you would,' the girl went on. 'It's awfully lonesome. Mother has gone out and father is up stairs groaning with rheumatism in both legs.'

'Both legs?' asked George.

'Yes, both legs.'

'Then I'll come in a little while.'—Phila. Evening Call.

'I do think that Jennie Bleeker is the most awfully vulgar and commonplace young person I ever saw,' exclaimed a New York girl, as she entered the house.

'She do seem somewhat low bred,' returned the girl's cultured mother.

'She is indeed. We were walking up the avenue this afternoon and were overtaken by Lord Fitzsponge, that delightful young Englishman, you know, whom we met at the Vanderstiffs last week, and Jennie, whose father is in the wholesale dry goods business, told him we had just come from her papa's store. His lordship didn't understand her at all, until I explained to him that she meant her papa's shop. It mortified me so.'—Anon.

The vine on the cot is blowing,
The nest is built in the tree,
And the apple limbs are snowing
Their blooms in the fragrant lea.
The bird to his mate is singing,
The lambkin skips on the hill,
And the rosy clover's springing
Beside the gurgling rill.
Sir Strephon his love is sighing,
The cricket begins to chirp
And the boy in the back yard's tying
The can to the brindled purp.

Above the lake in the hollow
That mirrors a cloudless sky
Is darting the airy swallow,
And the purple dragon-fly.
The bumble-bee in the garden
Runs riot the livelong day,
And Maud in her Dolly Varden
Plucks flowers along the way.
Sir Strephon his love is sighing,
The cricket begins to chirp,
And the boy in the back yard's tying
The can to the brindled purp.
—Manhittick.

'My dear,' said Mr. Topnoody to his wife, as he looked up from his paper, 'I see here that Henry Bergh is in favor of the whipping post for husbands who beat their wives. I don't think, though, you would like to see me led to the whipping post.'

'No, Topnoody, I would not. It might not be so severe on me to have you suffer to some extent, but I wouldn't want to see you killed.'

'Killed, my dear? it doesn't kill a man to whip him at the post.'

'No, Topnoody, not under ordinary circumstances; but if you had to go to the whipping post after I had got through with you in case you attempted to beat me, I feel more than confident it would be a larger dose than your constitution could stand, and I would be left a widow; and I don't want to be left a widow until after spring cleaning and early gardening are done.'

Topnoody returned to his reading.—Merchant Traveler.

Retired Book Agent—'Why, howde do, Jinks? How spruce you are looking. What business are you in now?'

'Jinks—'Same old business—selling books.

'What! still a book agent?'

'Yes.'

'And alive?'

'I seem to be.'

'Well, I can't understand it. Since I got out of the hospital I have given up books'

'I keep on and am making $20,000 a year.'

'How do you manage to escape death?'

'Easy enough. I first introduce myself as an agent of Mr. O'Donovan Rossa and ask for a subscription to the dynamite fund.'

'People refuse, of course?'

'Certainly. Then I take out of my pocket a can of brickdust, labeled in big letters 'Dynamite,' and begin to expatiate on its merits.'

'Yes.'

'They beg me to handle it carefully and put it away. Then I place it in my coat-tail pocket.'

'Oh! ho!'

'After that I open my samples and talk book to them until they buy, and they don't dare to kick me.'—Phila. Call

There was a party across the river the other night. Toward the close she slipped to his side and sweetly asked:

'Going home by yourself, Charlie?'

'Guess so,' he replied.

'Would you like some one to see you home?

'Depends on who it is.' His answers were short and crusty. Many a one would have been disheartened, but Lucy was not of that kind. She still persevered:

'Some young lady, I mean.'

'Depends on who the young lady is,' said the brute.

'Some one about my size,' persisted the angel.

'There are several here about your size.'

'There's only one exactly my size'

'See here, Lucy,' said Charlie, 'if you want to take me home you may.'

'Oh!' she replied, 'I've no particular desire to take you home; but as I was going your way I thought—'

He interrupted her with an 'All right!' and together they left.

He was leaning on her arm, and silently they meandered over the frozen streets. They stopped at his door. He invited her in.

'No, Charlie, I won't go in, but I want to tell you something.'

By the light of the street lamp on the corner Charlie's face was seen to grow pale as she continued:

'I am abundantly able to support a husband. I have a bank account of a good size. I love you, Charlie, and can give you a good home. Will you be mine, dearest?'

'Lucy,' gasped the brute, 'you've no idea what it takes to support a husband—'

She interrupted him.

'Darling, if it should be necessary, I would work from morning until night, and even take in washing and sewing; you shall want for nothing. Only say you will be mine.'

No, Lucy, it cannot be. I shall always love you as a brother, watch over your pathway through life, and should you stand in need of advice or assistance, you can rely on my willingness to assist you; but I can never marry you.'

'Then you refuse me?'

'Yes.'

'Base wretch!' she exclaimed, 'you will live to repent your hasty decision, for to-morrow my dead body will be found in the cold waters of the river.' And, clasping him in her arms in one convulsive embrace, she fled into the outer darkness.—Oil City Derrick.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

A BOY'S POCKET.

Buckles, and buttons, and top,
And marbles, and pieces of string,
A screw from a rusty old mop,
And scraps of a favorite sling.

Slate pencils, and part of a lock,
Some matches, and kernels of corn,
The wheels of a discarded clock,
And remains of a mitten all torn.

A jack-knife or two, never sharp,
Some pieces of bright-colored glass,
The rim of an ancient jews'-harp,
Pens, fish-hooks, and pieces of brass.

Old nails, "sweeties," chippings of tin,
With bits of a battered-up locket,
All these, and much more, are within
The depths of a little boy's pocket.
E. M. WOOD.

Two Opinions.

HIS. "I would not be a girl," said Jack,
"Because they have no fun;
They can not go a-fishing, nor
A-shooting with a gun."

HERS. "I would not be a boy," said May,
"For boys are horrid things,
With pockets filled with hooks and knives
And nails and tops and strings."

SOBRIQUETS OF NOTED MEN.

BY JAMES M. ADAMS.

Though in democratic America we have no titled rulers, yet nearly every man who has achieved distinction in any walk of life has his sobriquet, by which he is more or less widely known. Especially in this time of statesmen, politicians and soldiers.

These sobriquets are usually bestowed in recognition of some great achievement or achievements, or else illustrate some personal characteristic of the recipient.

Some of these democratic titles are trivial; others are of importance and form an accepted part of history and biography.

To begin with, let us mention he that was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," George Washington who is so justly called the "Father of his Country."

It is well known that instead of this title he might have had that of king, had he chosen; but his patriotism was of too high an order to listen to such a proposition. Posterity will honor him the more in his choice.

Henry Clay, the man who "had rather be right than be President," was known as the "Great Pacificator," because of the compromise measures introduced by him in Congress. These measures pacified the leaders of both factions, and serious difficulty was thereby averted.

Daniel Webster has been called "the Great Expounder of the Constitution," and is now often referred to as "the god-like Daniel," from its majestic presence.

John C. Calhoun, the Southern statesman, bore the sobriquet of "the Great Nullifier."

Thomas Jefferson was well styled "the Sage of Monticello." He was a scholar, and "a ripe and good one." John Adams, who died upon the same day as Jefferson, and who was closely associated with him in the early days of the Republic, was a man of great capacity, but personally and politically unpopular. He was called in derision by his neighbors "the Duke of Braintree," from his cold and aristocratic manners.

Andrew Jackson gained the title "Old Hickory" from his toughness and obstinacy. Though obstinate and very tenacious of his opinions, he was a man of strict integrity and undoubted patriotism.

John Quincy Adams, who served many years in the House of Representatives after being President, was appropriately called "The Old Man Eloquent."

Stephen A. Douglas was known as the "Little Giant."

Wm. Henry Harrison was sometimes called 'Tippecanoe,' in recognition of his victory at the battle of that name.

Zachary Taylor was termed by his soldiers "Old Rough and Ready."

The martyr Lincoln bore through life, and will ever bear in history—the sobriquet of "Honest Abe." How well he deserved it! Honesty, kindness and simplicity were the most prominent characteristics of the man whose memory the nation honors as that of one of her greatest statesmen and wisest rulers.

General Grant has been styled "The Silent Man," and during the war was sometimes called "Unconditional Surrender" Grant, the initials of these words being the same as those of his name.

General Marion, of Revolutionary fame, during the campaigns in the South gained the name of "The Swamp-Fox."

General Anthony Wayne was called "Mad Anthony," because of his bravery and impetuosity.

The dashing cavalry commander, Major Henry Lee, became "Light-Horse Harry.'

During the late civil war the soldiers delighted to call General Joseph Hooker "Fighting Joe," while General George H. Thomas will ever be known as the "Rock of Chickamauga,"

The Confederate general, Thomas J. Jackson, bore a name gained in a somewhat similar manner. At the battle of Bull Run, General Bee, of the Confederate army, while encouraging his men, pointed to Jackson, saying:

"There stands Jackson, like a stone wall."

Ever after this he was known as Stonewall Jackson, many believing it to be his real name.

Forbearance.

Such a long time the frost had lasted; berries were scarce, and the birds were almost starved. Made bold by hunger, the sparrows gathered round the pan that held Prin's, the terrier's dinner.

"I hope he won't fly at us," said a young bird, gazing fearfully at the kennel where Prin's rough head rested on his paws.

"Don't be afraid," said her brother, "he's much too lazy to stir; and if he should come I will soon make him go back again;" and the little sparrow raised his crest and looked very war-like.

"Yes, indeed," said another. "Who's afraid?"

Prin raised his head. "Pert little wretches!" he muttered, "Shall I go out and crush them with my paw? But no, they are hungry, and I am too strong to take offense at the threats of the weak."

So Prin laid his head down again, and the sparrows finished their meal and then flew away, chattering about their own bravery, and unconscious that they owed their lives as well as their dinners, to his forebearance.

"Is tunkintel better than cake or candy, ma?" asked a little boy.

"I do not know of anything called tunkintel my dear. Where did you hear about it?"

"Well, I heard our Lizzie telling her beau last night that she loved him more than tunkintel, so I guessed it might be something better than cake or candy."

"Now, children, how many of you ever saw a bear?"

About half the hands in the school room went up instantly, and all the eyes blazed with the delight of joyous recollection.

"But," continued the clergyman, "where was it you saw the bear?"

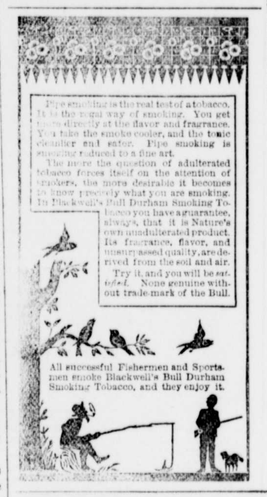

"Circus!" screamed fifty childish voices.

I hear that cutting trees has caused
Great floods for two successive years,
Its true, for oft at school I know,
The fresh-cut sprigs bring floods of tears.

Remember I do not confine myself exclusively to fine and high-priced work, but have an endless variety at medium and low prices.
I have THREE HEARSES, two large ones and one small white one for children and young persons; and with my handsome new Glass Hearse and fine pair of Black Horses, can furnish as fine a Funeral Turnout as can be seen in our large cities. I am constantly adding new features and improvements to my business, in order to keep up with the times; and as there are such changes in style and kind constantly going on, and, as is generally the custom, some friend is called into the embarrassing position of ordering what he supposes may be wanted, it would be much more satisfactory to all concerned to name the price of the article wanted
☞ ALWAYS REMEMBER that I guarantee to furnish anything in my line, of the same kind and quality, at lower prices than any other establishment of the kind. Ever grateful for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended me, I respectfully beg a continuance of the same.
☞ Residence second door above my shop.
Respectfully,
Aug10—tf. JOHN N. DODD.
