WIT, HUMOR AND WISDOM.

"BLESSED IS HE WHO CAN UNDERSTAND A JOKE, FOR VERILY THERE BE SOME WHO KNOW NOT A JOKE WHEN THEY SEE IT."
—A more or less ancient proverb.

It is all folly to say that love is blind. A fellow in love is very quick to detect if his girl smiles at another chap.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

The newest salad is made of sliced apples and sherry wine. The special advantage of this salad for private parties is said to be that no one will desire to be helped the second time.—Lowell Citizen.

In an advertisement by a railway company of some uncalled for goods, the letter 'I' had dropped from the word lawful, and it read—'People to whom these packages are directed are requested to come forward and pay the awful charges on the same.''—Anon

A New York car-driver when he wants to clear the stack shouts: 'Hi, there, hi.' A Chicago driver strikes his bell and shouts: 'Shake 'em up there, will you?' A Boston driver says: 'Deviate from a direct line those equine appendages, accelerate, accelerate, exhilaration, lively now.'—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

'I dont' see how you can endure that Pliffy girl, Jack?' said his sister. 'I'm sure there's nothing in her.'

'Nothing in her, indeed! I just wish you'd been with us to supper after the theatre to night,' and he dropped a tear over his buried salary.—San Francisco Post.

'Your fare, young lady,' said the stage driver, as a pretty miss stepped from his vehicle, and was about tripping away.

'Oh, thank you!' responded the absent-minded little beauty; 'I think your moustache becomes you real well, too.'

She got her ride free.—Burlington Free Press.

'My dear,' said Mrs. —— to her husband, 'I wish you would meet me to-day in front of Morrison's bookstore about 4 o'clock.'

'Yes, love,' replied her husband.

'And, Henry,' continued Mrs. ——, 'in case you get there before me you can make a chalk mark on the pavement, and if I get there before you I will rub it out, that you may know I was there.'—Anon.

'No true lady or gentleman,' nobly and fearlessly remarks the White River Junction Landmark, all in the one State of Vermont, 'no matter how costly or fashionable their raiment, will sit in the church and eat peanuts.' No! Never! Nor will a real lady put her feet up on the back of the pew and chew tobacco during the long prayer. Let us all buckle in and reform church etiquette at White River Junction.—Hawkeye.

A Vermont man stole a wooden Indian from a tobacconist and put it in a field frequented by a bull that had once torn the back out of his trousers with its horn, and nearly did him more damage. Of course the bull charged the Indian and tossed it, but it was so hard and heavy that it hurt his head and nearly broke his neck, and when it came down hit him on the back and made him squat and bellow with pain. And the man stood on the other side of the fence and was so happy he could be heard a quarter of a mile.—Boston Post.

Little Jack—Pop, you are a delegate to the Presidential Convention, ain't you?

Pop—Yes, my son.

Little Jack—And didn't you say you was an instructed delegate?

Pop—Yes.

Little Jack—Then what for did Mr. Biggs tell Mr. Bogg you wasn't?

Pop—Oh! I guess you misunderstood.

Little Jack—No, I didn't. He thinks you are uninstructed.

Pop—Why do you think so?

Little Jack—Because he said he didn't see why the party should select such an ignoramus as you.—Philadelphia Call.

A wife—possibly an old wife—on a certain occasion fell overboard. The husband rushed frantically about the deck, literally tearing his hair out by the handful and crying in the most beseeching tones, 'For heaven's sake, save her, save her, she's my wife!' The noble sailors thought of their own sweethearts and ran all risks, and at last brought the poor woman into the cabin of the swooning husband. The look of gratitude he gave them fully repaid them for all their efforts. Then recovering his equanimity he thrust his hand into his wife's wet pocket, pulled out a somewhat plethoric purse and with infinite relief, said: 'Old woman, the next time you tumble overboard, just leave that purse behind, will you? You scared me almost to death.'—Detroit Free Press.

'My dear,' said General Washington to his wife one cold frosty January morning, 'it's sun up.'

'Well, my love, what of it?' inquired the mother of her country.

'Why, when it's sun up it's about time to make the fire,' responded the General.'

Then Mrs. Washington gave the coverlet a vicious tug and remarked:

'Look shere, George Washington, if you want to have a fire you can get up and make it yourself. You may be the deliverer of your country, but you'll freeze to death if you wait for me to tackle the kindling wood. This bed's warm enough for me.'

Then General Washington slid out of bed, and as a cold wave struck him in the small of the back, he muttered:

'Derned if this don't knock out Valley Forge.'

And Mrs. Washington snored.—Anon.

A Western critic lately saw George Miln as Hamlet, and on the following day his conclusions were published as follows:

'There is too much chinning in the piece. The author is way behind the times and seems to forget that what we want nowadays is hair-raising situations and detectives. In the hands of a skillful playwright, a detective would have been put upon the track of Hamlet's uncle, and the old man would have been hunted down in a manner that would have excited the audience out of their number eleven. The moral of the piece is not good. The scene where Hamlet kissed his mother is a very bad example to the rising generation; and it isn't helped when the dreary old ghost comes in and tells him to hold his jaw. Our advice to the author is, a little more action, a little more gurgling taffy, and a fair share of variety business in his next piece. In the specialty acts of the play scene he has entirely missed his opportunities.'—Anon.

Two intoxicated individuals came down Washington street on a recent night and on arriving at the head of Milk street they stopped to take a rest, leaning meanwhile against a friendly electric light pole which was happily near at hand. As they stood viewing the surrounding objects one glanced upward and seeing the electric light, said:

'Shee how brightsh moon is!'

'Thatsh not the moon, thatsh sun,' said the other.

The argument continued in this vein for some time, and it was finally agreed that the decision should be left to the first citizen who should come along. In a few minutes a man appeared. He was stopped and the question was put to him for decision.

His disgust was made manifest by his reply, which was to the effect that 'he did not know what the light was,' and that 'he did not live in this part of the city anyhow.'

This reply was too much for the two inebriates and as they clutched each other firmly and moved off down town one was heard to mutter: '—Boston Post.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

Harry's Knife.

Harry never tired of looking at his new penknife. He thought his big cousin Jack a very nice young man because he chose him so fine a birthday present. And then all at once he blushed.

No wonder Harry blushed. Here it was 3 o'clock, and cousin Jack's rabbits had not been shut up and fed yet! And such mischief as the little brown hungry roughs had made in the garden! And cousin Jack had asked him to feed them, give them a run on the lawn, and then shut them in their pen.

And there was cousin Jack just driving up from town, where he had been all day. He looked surprised, for he saw the rabbits leaping up the terrace and down again. Without a word he helped Harry catch the rogues and shut them up.

'Now, jump in the carriage,' said he, 'and I will take you where your knife was made.'

Harry was surprised when they stopped at the grim old iron foundry. Cousin Jack picked up a piece of iron mixed with clay.

'Here's stuff for a dozen bright knife-blades,' said he.

Then Harry saw the men put the rough iron into a stove with limestone and charcoal and burn it. Then he saw the melted iron pour like a stream of fire from a hole in the bottom of the stove into beds of sand.

'When this iron is cold' said cousin Jack, 'they call it pig iron. It is not nice enough yet for birthday knife-blades. Besides, it would break and crumble if they tried to shape it now.'

They put the pig iron into the fire again and heated it gently, so that it was softer.

'Now,' continued cousin Jack, smiling, 'it is malleable iron. It can be pounded flat and shaped without breaking.'

Next it was pounded flat, then heated hot and cut into knife-blades, then plunged into cold water several times, them polished, then sharpened, and at last it was ready to be set into the handle.

'Knife-handles,' said cousin Jack, 'are made from elephant tusks, or ox and buffalo horns, cocoa wood, and shells of pearl oysters.'

'Mine is a pearl one,' said Harry, 'and I wish I had fed your rabbits and shut them up.'—Little Men and Women.

Comic Chimpanzees.

The keeper of the Chimpanzees at the Zoological Garden placed a doll-baby in their cage the other day. It was clothed in a red dress that attracted the attention of the animals in a moment. At first they stood at a respectable distance and hoo-hooed at it to show that they had not fallen in love with it at first sight. Then they began to stamp on the floor to scare it away. Finding this unavailing, the big one, dashed up to within a foot of the passive baby stamping and chattering; but finding that the strange thing did not budge, she turned tail and fled. The little one was not to be out done, although she was evidently greatly in fear of it. so she held her blanket up in front of her while she approached, but she did not go far. After a while the big one was brave enough to go quite near, so that with a straw she could tickle the new-comer under the chin. The doll never stirred. The end of the straw was examined and smelt of by the two animals, and nothing harmful being found, they ventured to touch it. They then scampered to the top of the cage.—After a while curiosity got the better of fear, and they returned to the inspection, which was mostly confined to sitting in front of it and making faces at it. The keeper tied the figure to a swing-rope. The big one dragged it by the hem of its garment to the box in which they sleep. They placed it inside and at once executed a war-dance on the top. The little one stopped her noisy sister with a vicious cuff and drew out the unfortunate. Then, sitting on the floor, she held it in her arms as if it had been a real baby of her own. After making evident fun of this soft-heartedness, the other pulled the doll away and deliberately sat on its head, striking the body with the palm of her hands. While she was endeavoring to regain the plaything the dress did not long remain in tact. After this they hauled the body about the cage, up the tree, and on to the cross-beam, and then threw it to the ground. One piece of the dress they used for a necktie, and another was turned into a head-dress, with which one of them adorned herself before the mirror in the corner.—Philadelphia Call.

The Boy Who Don't Care.

'My son, you are wasting your time playing with that kitten. You ought to be studying your lessons. You'll get a black mark if you do not study,' said Mrs. Mason.

'I don't care,' was the reply.

'Don't care, will ruin that child,' said Mrs. Mason to herself. 'I will teach him a lesson he will not forget.'

When noon arrived, her idle boy rushed into the house shouting:

'Mother, I want my dinner!'

'I don't care,' replied Mrs. Mason.

James was puzzled. His mother had never so treated him before. He was silent awhile, then he spoke again:

'Mother, I want something to eat!'

'I don't care,' was the cool reply.

'But recess will be over, mother, and I shall starve if I don't get some dinner,' urged James.

'I don't care.'

This was too much for the poor boy to endure. He burst into tears. His mother said:

'My son, I want to make you feel the folly and sin of the habit you have of saying 'I don't care.' Suppose I really did not care for you, what would you do for dinner, for clothing, for a nice home, for an education? I hope, therefore, you will cease saying, 'I don't care.''

James had never looked on this evil habit in this light before. He promised to do better, and after receiving a piece of pie, went to school a wiser if not a better boy.—Anon.

The Frog and the Two Geese.

Two geese, when about to start southwards on their annual autumn migration, were asked by a frog to take him with them. On the geese expressing their willingness to do so if a means of conveyance could be devised, the frog produced a stalk of strong grass, and made the two geese take it one by each end, while he clung to it by his mouth in the middle. In this manner the three were making their journey successfully, when they were noticed from below by some men, who loudly expressed their admiration of the device, and wondered who had been clever enough to discover it. The vain-glorious frog, opened his mouth to say 'it was I,' lost hold, fell to the earth, and was dashed to pieces.

Moral.—Do not let pride induce you to speak when safety requires you to be silent.—Anon.

"Jack Frost" and the Cherry Tree.

'I'm Queen of the May!' said a proud cherry tree, who was arrayed in bridal white. 'I'm the first comer, and have left all my sisters far behind me.'

'You may be Queen,' said 'Jack Frost,' as he gave her a sharp nip, 'but I am still King.'

'Well!' said the cherry tree, as she viewed with dismay the withered remains of her bridal veil, 'this is the first time I ever took Time by the forelock, and I wish I had given him a good pull for getting me into such a scrape. I shall have to call all my blossoms in, and begin over again. Another time I will remember that 'Haste makes Waste.''—'St. Nicholas Almanac.'

'How many bones are there in the human body?' asked a teacher.

'Please, sir,' piped a small boy at the foot of the class, 'if you wait until after the shad season, I think I can tell. I've swallowed four hundred and two already.'—Anon.
