DEMOCRATIC PRIMARIES.

Democratic Primary Meetings will be held at the usual places of voting in the several election districts of Kent county, at 2 P. M., on to elect five delegates for each election district, to constitute the county convention which meets in Chestertown on Tuesday, May 27th inst., to elect three delegates to represent Kent county in the Democratic State Convention, which meets in Baltimore city on the 5th day of June, which will elect delegates to represent this State in the Democratic National Convention, which meets in Chicago on July 8th next, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, and which will (the State convention) nominate Democratic Presidential Electors for the State of Maryland; also, to elect three Delegates to represent this county in the Convention to be held at Cambridge, Aug. 6th, to nominate a Democratic candidate for Congress for the First Congressional District.

THERE seems to be a constantly growing boom for Tilden. Well, the country cannot supply a wiser, better, broader statesman.

BALTIMORE'S permanent exhibition has probably gone permanently under. The amount of $1,000,000, which it was proposed to raise, fell short by more than $600,000.

ARE the base ball nines of the American association playing "put-up games?" From watching the varying success of the Baltimore nine, this suspicion will creep in.

WILL the late crash in Wall street have any political effect? At least it will not create the belief that the country's safety requires Gen. Grant for a third term.

CONGRESSMAN FINDLAY says he don't know who of the political leaders are opposing his re-nomination. He will find out in time that opposition to his re-nomination comes more from the voters than from the leaders.

THAT Chestertown will soon be supplied with good pure water, seems now beyond peradventure. There are already signatures on the part of citizens of the town calling for water to 125 houses. The town commissioners have authority to vote annual funds on the part of the town not exceeding $500 and the Kent Mutual Fire Insurance Company has authorized the annual appropriation of a sum not exceeding $250. All these favorable circumstances warrant a speedy pushing of the matter to a successful issue.

WE have received from Capt. Waddell, commander of the Maryland oyster police, a copy of the report of the Maryland oyster commission, made to the last session of the Maryland Legislature. The report is an interesting and valuable treatise upon the oyster interests of Maryland. It is evidently the result of painstaking investigation. It gives information concerning the extent and present condition of the Maryland oyster beds, and upon other facts concerning them that has never before been placed within the reach of those seeking information upon the matter. The Brooks-Waddell report should be studied by our legislators, and will prove instructive reading to all who take an interest in the oyster question.

BLACK WEDNESDAY AND BLACK FRIDAY.

GRANT'S FIRST AND LAST APPEARANCE IN WALL STREET—A SPECULATOR ALL THE TIME.

Gen. Grant's name will always be associated with two of the darkest days in the history of Wall street. The first was the 24th of September, 1869, when the great gold speculation culminated in a memorable crash. That scheme was organized by Jay Gould, James Fisk, Jr., and A. R. Corbin, brother-in-law of Gen. Grant. Corbin was the intermediary by whom the then President and the speculators were brought into personal contact.

Mr. Gould's theory in this venture was that the country had overtraded with Europe to the extent of a hundred millions of dollars, and the way to pay this debt was to promote the exportation of grain. This could be done by advancing the price of gold. If this was done the "price of gold would go up while the movement was going on, and afterwards drop down again. Thus we could make money both ways, by buying it then and selling it on the rise."

The great step in this movement was to convert Gen. Grant to Mr. Gould's theory, by which the Government would not sell gold. Corbin arranged meetings between Grant, Gould and Fisk. In his testimony before the committee of the House of Representatives, Gould swore:

The interview [with Grant] on the way to Boston was a wet blanket; the other interview was more satisfactory. I did not buy any gold for Mr. Corbin until I was assured from the President that the Government would not do anything to put down the price of gold.

Backed by this powerful influence, Gould and Fisk bought enormous quantities of gold, the premium on which was forced up to 144 the day preceding the collapse. Merchants and others who were compelled in their business to pay this ruinous price, were greatly excited under the threat that it would be raised still higher. The name of the President was freely used to bolster up the speculation. On the morning of the 24th of September, the press assailed the whole scheme as a sheer gambling operation, and at noon that day Mr. Boutwell ordered four millions of gold to be sold, which burst the bubble and closed the corner of Gould and Fisk.

Besides the injury which this gold gambling inflicted, it was attended with a scandal seriously involving the private and official household of the President. Fisk testified to a conference with Corbin as follows:

"The whole success depends on whether the Government will unload to us or not. He [Corbin] said: 'You need not have the least fear' I said: 'I want to know whether what Mr. Gould told me is true. I want to know if you have sent this $25,000 to Washington as he states.' He then told me that he had sent it; that Mr. Gould had sold $500,000 of gold belonging to Mrs. Grant, which cost 33, for 37, or something in that neighborhood, leaving a balance of about $27,000 in her favor, and that a check for $25,000 had been sent her."

This instructive experience seems to have had no effect on Gen. Grant. He served as President for two terms, during the latter of which his salary was doubled. He retired from office in easy circumstances, and with a valuable property in Washington, in Philadelphia, and in Galena. His friends, including Mr. Jay Gould, contributed a quarter of a million of dollars in addition to relieve him of all pecuniary anxiety for the remainder of his days.

Instead of returning to his home in Illinois with the dignity of a retired President, Gen. Grant established himself in New York, and was drawn into the whirlpool of Wall street by the greed of gain, to be swallowed up as others before him have been who blindly staked everything on an infatuation. His partnership with Ward and the revelations which have followed that unfortunate connection may be called startling for credulous weakness and incapacity for the every day affairs of life, considering what Gen. Grant has passed through as a soldier and as a citizen.

The whole basis of what is called the blind pool of Grant & Ward was an alleged mysterious power at Washington over contracts that never had any existence. On this point Col. Fred Grant is reported to have said: "As far back as two years ago we heard that he [Ward] had held out inducements to investors based upon the secret influence which Gen. Grant had at Washington for securing profitable Government contracts. When this report reached the ears of my father he communicated it to Ward, and threatened to withdraw from the firm. Ward assured him that he had never offered such inducements to any one."

It is astounding, in view of this notice of Ward's dealings, that Gen. Grant took no step to inform himself of the truth of these damaging reports. His name and character gave the firm all the standing it enjoyed, and his first duty to the friends who were attracted by confidence that he would protect them was to seek the fullest information. He appears to have accepted Ward's denial as a sufficient answer to the rumors, and to have made no inquiry at Washington or elsewhere.

If Gen. Grant's fortune has been impaired, and if he has lost position before the country, he may blame himself for having departed from the safe guides of his predecessors in the Presidency. When he entered Wall street as a speculator he voluntarily took all the chances of that vocation, and left behind him the sympathy and the respect which justly attach to misfortune in any honorable pursuit.—N. Y. Sun.

Reorganizing the Maryland Oyster Navy and Other Matters.

Captain Waddell, commanding the State fishery force, in order to simplify matters, has divided the force into three steam districts. Captain Gordy, of the Governor Hamilton, will have charge of the first, which includes Bodkin Point and Susquehanna river. He will have two police sloops under him. The second district will embrace the Choptank river, Eastern bay, Fishing bay, Kent Island and the local beds near Annapolis, and two sloops will guard them. Capt. Waddell will have immediate control over them. The third district is assigned to Commander Hedge Thompson, of the Leila, who will have five sloops under him. This district embraces Potomac and Patuxent rivers, Hooper's straits, Tar bay, Tangier sound and Smith's Point. When the new sloops for the force are built they will be assigned to the first and second districts. The commanders of the sloops are to report to the district commanders, who will make final reports to the commander of the oyster navy at Annapolis. The steamer Leila left Annapolis to day with its new commander.

Treasurer Compton says that nothing has yet been said in the board of public works as to how the board will vote on the canal presidency. The State, which is represented by the board of public works, holds a controlling vote in the election. It is believed Mr. Compton will support President Smith and the old board of directors for re-election.

Capt. W. F. Chesley, of the Leonardtown Rifles, St. Mary's county, has applied for uniforms and equipments. Arms and accoutrements have been asked for the boys of the Manual Labor School and House of Refuge.

It has been decided to continue St. John's College, notwithstanding the withdrawal of State aid and the resignation of Dr. Leavitt, the principal. Prof. Wm. H. Hopkins, the vice principal, will have the direction of affairs, and the corps of instructors will remain full as heretofore.—Annapolis letter of Balt. Sun.

Mr. Findlay as an Orator.

From the Anne Arundel Advertiser.

Mr. Findlay's antecedents did not entitle him to speak for the Democratic party, and he should be allowed hereafter to air his Findlayisms at home. The party has never tried to lift out of the shades of obscurity a more vapid rhetorician and oratorical blatherskite. He is copious and superfluous of gaudy diction, and is as proud of it as a bird of his fine feathers. But it is all glitter and empty show, and contains nothing solid and enduring. It appeared supremely ridiculous for this pretentious demagogue to undertake to enlighten the Democratic party as to what its duty is in reference to the modification of the excessive charges of an inordinate and oppressive war tariff, and coming from a Southern State to invoke against the measure all the adventitious prejudices of sectional hatred; out of the entire list of opponents of the measure the only one who did it. Meanwhile his speech was declamatory, empty and frothy.

Only Two Sides.

A writer in the Baltimore Sun thus plainly states the two sides of the tariff issue;

There are only two sides to the tariff discussion. First. The Republican side. That government is paternal, and ought to supervise, protect and regulate the private affairs of the people, because they are not able to take care of themselves, and that, therefore, it is just, wise and constitutional that taxes should be so levied as to support those branches of business that are unable to support themselves, and that people who are able to earn their own living should contribute to the support of those who cannot.

Second. The Democratic side, that the people are capable of self-government, and are able to take care of their own private affairs, and are most happy and prosperous the less they are interfered with by government. Therefore it is unjust, unwise and unconstitutional that taxes should be levied for any other purpose whatever save for the support of government, and that goverment has no right to take one man's earnings and appropriate them to another man's support. These are the two sides.

Stonewall Jackson's Daughter.

From the Washington Star.

The world has just discovered that General Stonewall Jackson left a daughter, and England and France have discovered that she is the most beautiful woman that has visited their shores this season.—Miss Julia Jackson is said to be a much more beautiful girl than the now famous Jennie Chamberlain, and there is every probability of her being the rage the coming season in London. It would appear that the crop of English professional beauties has given out, as we hear of no one who takes the place formerly filled by Mrs. Langtry and Mrs. Cornwallis West. It is a new field for American enterprise. Miss Jackson is a dark type, and half the artists in London are raving about her eyes.

ANDREW JACKSON, in his farewell address to the American people, said:

Rely upon it, the design to collect an extravagant revenue, and to burden you with taxes beyond the economical wants of the government is not yet abandoned. The various interests which have combined together to impose a tariff and to produce an overflowing treasury are too strong, and have too much at stake, to surrender the contest. The corporations and wealthy individuals who are engaged in large manufacturing establishment desire a high tariff to increase their gains. Designing politicians will support it to conciliate their favor and to obtain the means of profuse expenditure for the purpose of purchasing influence in other quarters.

These words were spoken forty-four years ago, and they are as true to-day as then.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 16, 1884.

The Congressman nowadays who is kept up late by a night session, or a protracted meeting of his committee, or other things, told to the wives of our national legislators as reasons why their distinguished husbands do not get in before the 'wee sma' hours,' has his morning slumbers disturbed by the market peddler, shouting as he passes through the streets: 'Strawberries! Strawberries! Pretty berries; red berries!' The would-be sleeper grumbles on being awakened by these continued howlings, turns his heavy head on his pillow and wishes that the vegetable vender and his berries were in Guinea; but when dinner-time comes and the delicious fruit, which has come within reach of his boarding-house keeper's pocket book, is served to him, he forgets the unhappy and uncharitable feelings he had in the morning when awakened, and agrees with Izaak Walton that perhaps God could have made a better berry than the strawberry, but he never did. There are a good many small land owners, among them many colored people, in the vicinity of Washington, who raise nothing besides strawberries. When that crop fails their land gives them nothing; but the crop seldom or never fails entirely, and though the berries are usually sold at a low price, the abundance which an acre will yield when properly cultivated, makes the growing of them a profitable business to the truck farmers hereabout

The American Fish Cultural Association has been holding a three days' session, and adjourned yesterday, after, as the members say, the most successful and satisfactory meeting ever held by the organization. Before adjourning, yesterday, they were received by the President, and afterwards taken on a trip down the Potomac. The name of the association has been changed to 'The American Fisheries Society.' The State Commissioners present were Messrs. Roosevelt, Blackford and Mather, New York; Mr. Evarts, Vermont; Dr. Cary, Georgia; Col. Marshal McDonald, Virginia; Kellogg and Parker, Michigan; Hudson, Pike and Woodruff, Connecticut; Daniels and Dority, Ohio; Judge French, Massachusetts; May, Nebraska; Humphreys, Maryland; and T. B. Ferguson, Assistant United States Fish Commissioner. During the conference Col. McDonald stated that since 1878, the annual increase in the catch of shad in American waters average one hundred thousand per annum more than the catch for the five years preceding 1878.

As we predicted, Major-General B. F. Butler, the Massachusetts widow, comes up smiling with the second presidential nomination of the year, and before the season is over will be the most numerously nominated candidate in the field.

The statesmen of both parties are taking a rest from politics and President making, and enjoying the races at Ivy City and excursions to the battle fields of Fredericksburg and the Wilderness. In a few days the pot will boil again and we can look for lively times until November.

The Senate yesterday wisely passed the $1,000,000, Cotton Exhibition loan bill, with minor amendments, which were at once concurred in by the House and the measure has now become a law. President Arthur has taken a very deep interest in the success of his enterprise and yesterday promulgated the following:

'In conformity with the executive order directing the organization of a board to be composed of one person to be named by the head of each of the executive departments which may have articles and materials to be at the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, I hereby direct the persons who have been so designated, viz: Major and Brevet Lieut. Col. Stephen C. Lyford, United States Army, of the War Department, President of the Board; Chas. S. Hill of the Department of State; Lieut. B. H. Buckingham, United States Navy, of the Navy Department; William F. MacLellan, of the Treasury Department; Abraham D. Hazen, Assistant Postmasters General; Benjamin Butterworth, of the Interior Department; Cecil Clay, of the Department of Justice; William Saunders, of the Agricultural Department; G. Brown Goode of the Smithsonian Institution; Lyndon A. Smith, of the Bureau of Education, Interior Department, to assemble at the Department of State, in the City of Washington, at noon on the 17th day of May, 1884, and then and there to organize said board, and said board, when so organized, shall immediately proceed to the discharge of its duties. I also designate W. A. DeCaindry as the Secretary of said Board.'

This exposition has now assumed the shape of a grand International enterprise and it is expected to be the grandest success of the century.

On Tuesday forenoon last, the fire-bells sounded in Washington, and the alarm ran through the city that Willard's hotel was on fire. Scarcely since the assassination of President Garfield at the Baltimore and Potomac depot, has the Capital been more excited. People from the four corners of the city came hurrying to the scene of the threatened disaster. A large number of Senators, Representatives and Government Officials board at this hotel, and they and their friends were quickly on hand and at work transferring their effects. One or two sick persons and a couple of servants were with some difficulty rescued from suffocation by smoke. The fire did not do a great deal of damage, but had it occurred at night, a terrible disaster might have resulted. This hotel was in a like way threatened with destruction in 1861, and was only saved by the intervention and efforts of Elsworth's zouaves, then quartered in Washington. It was at Willard's during the war that many campaigns were planned, and it may be sometimes more with the intent of destroying the military reputation of Generals than the purpose of defeating the enemy.

Ex-Secretary Blaine, with his daughter, has gone to Natural Bridge in Virginia, as he and his friends say for rest and recreation, but it is in everybody else's mouth that the Maine statesman has gone there to confer with Mr. H. C. Parsons, one of the most prominent members of the straight-out Republican delegation to Chicago, who resides at Natural Bridge. Mr. Parsons is a warm personal friend of the ex-Secretary, and was one of the first men in Virginia to advocate his claims to the Presidency this year. So it is surmised that Mr. Blaine's trip to this natural wonder is a combination of pleasure and politics, and that his chief object in going to Natural Bridge is to confer with Col. Parsons as to the best policy to be pursued by the straight-out Republican delegation at Chicago, all of which delegation are for Mr. Blaine's nomination. S. B.

THE WOOD!

Cuts, Binds & Carries to the Shock

She is in advance of them all. She cuts her cord with a chisel, and does it with ease. Makes no noise like a cart tipping over stones. Mr. Wood invented it himself, and had seven companies try to buy the right. He won't sell. Mr. Appleby sells shop-right, and twenty different Reapers use his Binder, and all trying to improve on it.

The WOOD has but Two Springs in her Binder, some of them have ten. When they get weak they will miss sheaves certain. Every person buying the Wood will get a book with every piece numbered, and the pieces will be kept at Mr. Sol Startt's shop, handy for the farmers.

WE HAVE A MOWER

SECOND TO NONE.

It has steel plates, and when the guards wear out can be repaired at a cost of ten cents, and then she is as good as new. She runs light, don't choke in heavy grass, has patent oil boxes, no dirt nor grit can get in. Driver sets on and oils, runs easy and has durability. If they do not work we want no pay.
