C. G. WOODALL
Editor and Publisher.

THERE is no necessity for the Democratic press to discuss Mr. Blaine's record. A large part of the Republican press is doing that in a very satisfactory manner.

ALREADY the Republican journals (i.e. the Blaine & Logan ones) have hunted up Senator Bayard's 1861 speech, and are endeavoring to make a killing argument from it. The New York Sun has published the speech entire, and has shown that the sentiments which are stigmatized as disloyal, are in accord with the sentiments of Wendall Phillips, Horace Greely and other eminent Republican leaders of the time.

"Mr. I. N. Mills, the superintendent of the Delaware railroad, who has the best opportunities for judging in the matter, says there will be from 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 baskets of peaches carried over his road this season."

That is interesting enough. Now Mr. I. N. Mills will make his statement more interesting if he will say whether or not his road proposes to absorb the whole 6,000,000 to 8,000,000 baskets in way of freights, or whether the growers will be allowed something like a fair divvy in the profits. Information on this latter question would be of great interest to peninsula peach growers.

JAMES G. BLAINE was nominated by the recent Chicago Convention, because it was believed that at sound of his name, there would go up one immense hurrah, that should reverberate from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Except in Maine and certain parts of Pennsylvania however, there has been very little hurrahing since the Chicago Convention adjourned. Most of the hurrah element it would seem was gathered up and transported to Chicago to get in its hurrah work there. The hurrah in New York and Massachusetts has been of an especially depressing nature."

ONE of the strongest indications of the weakness of the Blaine-Logan ticket is the weak manner in which the Republican papers that are still faithful sustain it. They have so far been engaged principally in abuse of the journals that have deserted their cause. We have not observed a single editorial reason why the ticket recently nominated at Chicago is deserving of election. Indeed, what can the faithful organs say? The "Plumed Knight" gag is worn out. And when it comes to giving solemn facts as campaign literature, the solemn facts are not favorable to Mr. Blaine's cause.

THE Democratic party will not be fooled into relying for success upon Republican disgust,—great as that appears to be just now,—over Blaine and Logan. A strong man with a clean record will doubtless gather in most of the independent vote. There is no doubt but that the July Chicago Convention will put up a strong man, and one with a clean record. But, over and above this, the Chicago Convention will not be likely to forget the record the Democratic party has made in the present Congress as a tariff reform party.

ON OUR first page, we publish the letter of declination of Samuel J. Tilden. It is a great letter written by a great man. It is great in its beautiful yet strong simplicity; but it is greater in its tone of lofty patriotism. It will live for all time as a specimen of good strong simple English, and it will live for all time as the emanation of a mind great enough to decline the greatest of worldly honors. Samuel J. Tilden will never be president of these United States, but his name will go down to generations that shall live a thousand years from now, and his memory will be honored wherever American history is read.

THE New York Democratic Convention, to elect 72 delegates to Chicago, met at Saratoga yesterday. If this New York Convention sends to Chicago even half of the 72 as Cleveland delegates, there is but little doubt that the New York Governor will be the Presidential nominee of the Democratic party. If, however, Flower should capture the Saratoga Convention, and should have a large majority of the New York delegates asking for his nomination at Chicago, then Senator Bayard would undoubtedly loom up as the strongest at Chicago. From yesterday's New York papers, however, it appeared that the Saratoga Convention would be largely for Cleveland.

THE Chicago Convention seems to have stirred up the Maryland Republicans to more wrangling than usual. It appears that two aspiring leaders on the Eastern Shore have ceased to love each other. Col. Hodson, the Republican Senator from Somerset, who was conspicuous in the last Maryland Senate, in the last issue of his paper,—The Crisfield Leader speaks of Mr. Charles T. Westcott of this town in a manner that indicates anything rather than brotherly love. He accuses Mr. Westcott of being envious because he,—Col. Hodson won the contest for delegate at large to Chicago. The Col. further charges that Mr. Westcott endeavored at Chicago to make himself out a great man at his,—Col. Hodson's expense. He also expresses the opinion that Mr. Westcott's chief pride and merit is in being the son of a rich man. All this is interesting reading—exceedingly interesting reading. It will also be pleasant to peruse the terms of endearment in which Mr. Westcott shall speak of Col. Hodson. Doubtless the dashing Colonel has some weak points that will look well in print.

Was Mr. Bayard Disloyal in 1861?

N. Y. Sun.

We republish in full to-day the speech delivered at Dover in 1861 by the Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, as reported at the time in the Delaware Gazette. The accuracy of the report, we believe, has not been questioned.

It will be observed that Mr. Bayard made this speech about two months after the attack on Fort Sumter. The occasion was a so-called Peace Convention, held on June 27, 1861, on the village green at Dover, in response to a call to "all citizens opposed to civil war, and in favor of a peaceful adjustment of all questions which have distracted the country and produced its present lamentable condition." Mr. Bayard was then thirty-two years old, and it was not until eight years afterward that he took his seat in the United States Senate. His father, the Hon. James A. Bayard, was one of the Senators from Delaware.

The most casual examination of Mr. Bayard's remarks at Dover will show that he was utterly and entirely wrong in his judgement respecting the course to be pursued in dealing with the eleven seceding States. He was opposed to a vigorous prosecution of the war to suppress the rebellion. As a citizen of a State on the border line between the North and South, yet still faithful to the Union, he stated the question of war or peace as he understood it at the time. Here are his words:

"Shall we make war upon and subjugate this new confederacy, or shall we peacefully treat with them and consent to their self-government, trusting to time, which is the great healer of all wrongs and passions, to bring them again voluntarily into a common Government with us?"

After drawing a picture of the horrors of civil war, he asked:

"Is such a war necessary for the peace and happiness of the United States? * * * Why may not two American confederacies exist side by side without conflict, each emulating the other in the progress of civilization? With such a sickening alternative as civil war, why should not the experiment at least be made?"

Then Mr. Bayard proceeded to answer the questions which he had asked:

"I believe with the late Senator Douglas that a 'war is disunion, certain, final, inevitable,' and, so believing, I oppose it. I believe solemnly that the war inaugurated by Abraham Lincoln and his Cabinet is worse than fruitless—that it will prove more disastrous to the North than to the South, and never will accomplish its professed object."

A little later he said:

"Human governments were ordained for the happiness and protection of society. If peace will restore and secure these blessings to the people of the United States, even though a number of their former associates have gone off under a new and independent organization, in the name of heaven let us raise our voice for it!"

And, in conclusion:

"Let us, fellow men, follow peace as our bright north star, whose radiance may be mild, but never delusive or uncertain, while in the calamities of war, and that worst of wars, a civil war, we shall only reach by sheer exhaustion the peace we can now command in ten days by treaty."

Immediately after Mr. Bayard had spoken, the meeting adopted a series of resolutions. The following are those most significant of the spirit and purpose of the assemblage:

"1. Resolved, That while we deeply deplore the revolution which has severed eleven States from the Union, we prefer peace to civil war, and believe that if a reconciliation by peaceful means shall become impossible, the acknowledgment of the independence of the Confederate States is preferable to an attempt to conquer and hold them as subjugated provinces.

"2. That the reign of terror attempted to be inaugurated by the war party by denouncing all men as dis-unionists, secessionists, and traitors who are opposed to civil war and to the palpable and gross violations of the Constitution committed by the present Administration, will not deter us from the expression of our opinions both privately and publicly."

We have quoted those passages of Mr. Bayard's speech which seem to us most likely to be used against him in the event of his nomination to the Presidency. There is no question that Mr. Bayard was at that time opposed to the war policy of Mr. Lincoln's Administration. Events have proved that he was totally mistaken in believing that it was better to let the South go, if go it would. This belief, however, was shared by many Democrats and Republicans at the North whose loyalty to the Union and whose devotion to the principles that finally prevailed in the memorable conflict have never been questioned. Mr. Bayard's opinions were also held by Dr. Horace Greeley, while the late Wendell Phillips went so far beyond him that he welcomed disunion, and protested against any effort to bring the seceding States back to allegiance. We look in vain through the Dover speech for a single expression of sympathy with treason, for any attempt to vindicate the right of the Southern States to withdraw from the Union, or any sentence or phrase or word giving color to the charge that Mr. Bayard was disloyal.

Fifteen years afterward, in the Senate of the United States and in reply to an insinuation from Mr. Boutwell of Massachusetts, Mr. Bayard made this eloquent declaration of unchanged loyalty:

"The Senator has suggested that in some way I have been a party to some act or deed unfaithful to the integrity of the Government of this country. I will simply say that every drop of blood in my body comes from men and women who, since the Government was established, never harbored a thought or did an act unfaithful or unpatriotic. No man can assert the contrary. The Senator does not do so. He might attempt it by an inuendo, by classifying me with those whom he terms enemies of the country; but he knows as well as I that the man who says that I ever did an act or uttered a word unfaithful to the integrity of my country's Government has lied in his throat."

Let every Democrat read the Dover speech of June 27, 1861, and decide for himself whether it contains a word inconsistent with Mr. Bayard's declaration of March 30, 1876.

The Tribune's Compliment to Logan.

The N. Y. Tribune is the only Republican newspaper of character and eminence in N. Y. city that is supporting Blaine and Logan. The N. Y. Post has hunted over the files of the Tribune, and has found the following tribute which the latter-named journal paid to Nominee John A. Logan, in the issue of Jan. 15, 1875:—

"Pranced there in upon the arena of the great debate, like a trick mule in a circus or a spavined nightmare upon the track of a beautiful dream—Logan, of Illinois. There was a vision of mustaches, eyebrows and hair piled on each other in arches; a large brandishing of arms, a pose and stridulous war whoop; and much as though a picture of the Deerfield massacre had stepped out from the pages of our early history, Logan took the American Senate by its capacious ear. And then he went for his mother tongue. He smote it right and left, hip and thigh, and showed no mercy. Swinging the great broad axe of his logic high in air, he turned it ere it fell, and with the hammer side struck the language of 60,000,000 of people fairly in the face, and mashed it beyond recognition. Under his stroke the floor of the American Senate was spattered with the remnants of a once proud vocabulary, and messengers, doorkeepers and pages were covered from head to foot with the spray. In the fearful two hours which followed the first roar of his oration, all the parts of speech were put to flight. There were orphaned adjectives and widowed nouns, bachelor verbs driven to polygamy, and polygamous verbs left lonely; conjunctions dissevered, prepositions scattered, adverbs disheveled and distorted, and syntax flung into wild disorder. It was a great day for Logan.

"He set his teeth into the language as the untamed tiger of the jungles takes between his mouth and paw the wearing apparel of the wayfarer, and the ripping of it was heard through all the forest depths. It reverberated to the other end of the Capitol, and sluggish Representatives lifted up their ears and listened to the roar with terrified awe. Some started for the scene; but upon being told the cause of the disturbance in the brief communication, 'Logan's up,' turned back, with full assurance that they could hear from that end of the Capitol all that was worth hearing. So through two hours Logan swung his beautiful arms over the heads of the Senate like the booms of a government derrick, while his chin churned the language like a pile driver in a heavy sea, and the baffled reporters made wild plunges with their pencils to gather up his regurgitations for the printer.

"Ah! Logan is a great man; a statesman. When he throws his intellect into a question, whether it is of finance or self-government, or of sticking to the ship, something has got to come. And you may always know where to find him—to wit, where he has always been, drawing pay from the government in some capacity. He lacks only fifteen or twenty things of being an orator. He has lungs."

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE 13, 1884.

The letter of declination of the nomination at Chicago in July, by Mr. Tilden, while anticipated by a few was a genuine surprise to the majority of Democrats as well as Republicans here, and while a cause of great regret to many who desire to right the wrong of 1876, instead of depressing Democratic hope of success has in fact created a spirit of earnest determination on the part of all to put forth greater efforts for success than would have followed Mr. Tilden's nomination.

With Mr. Tilden out of the field, already the friends of Governor Cleveland, Roswell P. Flower, Senator Bayard and ex-Senators McDonald and Thurman, and ex-Speaker Randall, are at work and earnestly presenting the strong points of their favorites.

There is a marked difference in the moder and manner of urging candidates for the Democratic nomination from those resorted to by Republicans. There is no attempt being made to traduce or vilify, but every Democrat you meet while he has his favorite has something good to say for others, and all express a determination to support the nominees whoever they may be. It is safe to say there will be no bolting, no kicking, but a unanimous support by Democrats of whoever the party in convention assembled may choose to present, a like unanimous determination to succeed.

The Blaine and Logan campaign as viewed from this point, seems lifeless and dead, not a single demonstration having been made to indicate even acquiesence much less enthusiastic endorsement. The pyrotechnics seem all to have been exhausted at Chicago. Father Clapp and his pie-bald committee, are trying to stir up the few faithful to the point of attempting a demonstration here within a few weeks, but the employees in the departments do not seem to be ready to take sides just yet, and without their aid a District demonstration would be a tame affair. It appears from this standpoint that all the life had gone out of the g. o. p., and it was quietly awaiting the hour of its decent sepulture. This is about the political situation here and from all information attainable the same state of facts exists throughout the country. Now is certainly the Democratic party's grand opportunity.

Speaker Carlisle, it is said, is heartily in favor of ex-Senator McDonald's nomination for President on the Democratic ticket, and doesn't want his own name to go before the Convention for anything. He advises all of his friends to work for McDonald, and the more he does so the more they seem disposed to work for Carlisle.

I have to say, in regard to Mr. Bannon's advertisement in the Transcript and Kent News, that I think it unjust to have my property advertised for claims that I have nothing to do with. Baker got a decree to sell by the court, some time prior to the date of Mr. Bannon's decree. I had settled my father's debts, and had purchased of C. H. Baker, as trustee, my part of the land devised to me by my father, and had settled with said C. H. Baker, trustee, for the purchase money for same in full.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

HENRY B. MILLER, REBECCA MILLER, JAMES WATKINS & OTHERS.

vs.

WILLIAM T. ELBEN, GEORGIANNA ELBEN, his wife, and others.

In the Circuit Court for Kent county.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate in Kent county.

The Bill states that Joseph Mann, late of Kent county, was in his lifetime seized and possessed of certain real estate lying and being in said county and being so thereof seized and possessed, some time in the year 1870, departed this life, leaving Mary Mann, his widow, and Rebecca A., wife of Harry B. Miller, Margaret, the wife of Wm. C. Palmer, Samuel H. Mann, Georgianna Elben, wife of Wm. T. Elben, and Wm. T. Mann, his only children, and Mary S., the child of his deceased deaughter, Mary Jane, wife of Charles DeFord, his only heirs at law, and that the said Mary S. is now the wife of James Watkins.

That the said Mary Mann, his widow, departed this life in or about the year 1870, and the said William T. Mann departed this life some time in the year 1878, unmarried and intestate, seized and possessed of an undivided ⅓ interest in the aforesaid real estate, leaving the said Rebecca A. Miller, Georgianna Elben Margaret Palmer, Samuel H. Mann, and the said Mary S. Watkins, the daughter of his deceased sister, Mary Jane DeFord, his only heirs at law.

That the said Samuel H. Mann, with his wife Emma Mann, conveyed all his title and interest in and to the ⅓ of the said real estate to Emily A. Hurtt, and the same has passed through various assignments into the hands of Thomas R. Quimby, who now holds the same.

That the said real estate is not susceptible of partition amongst the parties entitled without loss and injury to them; and is liable to be sold and the proceeds divided amongst the parties entitled.

And that the said William C. Palmer is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

It is therefore ordered this 30th day of May, 1884, that the complainants by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Kent county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 4th day of July, 1884, give notice to the said William C. Palmer, the non-resident, defendant of the object and substance of this Bill, and warn him to appear in this court in person or by attorney on or before the 4th day of October, 1884, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

FARMERS WANTING

Binders or Reapers

will do well to look at

THE WOOD!

Cuts, Binds & Carries to the Shock

She is in advance of them all. She cuts her cord with a chisel, and does it with ease. Makes no noise like a cart tipping over stones. Mr. Wood invented it himself, and had seven companies try to buy the right. He won't sell. Mr. Appleby sells shop-right, and twenty different Reapers use his Binder, and all trying to improve on it.

The WOOD has but Two Springs in her Binder, some of them have ten. When they get weak they will miss sheaves certain. Every person buying the Wood will get a book with every piece numbered, and the pieces will be kept at Mr. Sol Startt's shop, handy for the farmers.

WE HAVE A MOWER
SECOND TO NONE.

It has steel plates, and when the guards wear out can be repaired at a cost of ten cents, and then she is as good as new. She runs light, don't choke in heavy grass, has patent oil boxes, no dirt nor grit can get in. Driver sets on and oils, runs easy and has durability. If they do not work we want no pay.
