National Democratic Ticket.

FOR PRESIDENT:

GROVER CLEVELAND,
OF NEW YORK.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT:

THOS. A. HENDRICKS.
OF INDIANA.

FOR CONGRESS:

CHAS. H. GIBSON,
OF TALBOT COUNTY.

Gov. CLEVELAND'S letter of acceptance is terse and vigorous. It indicates that the nominee of the Democratic party is a man not only of upright purpose, but of clear and vigorous intellect. The letter does not, like Mr. Blaine's, endeavor to secure votes by flattering interests that are adverse to each other. It speaks out, however, for "honest and frugal government" in a manner that leaves no doubt but that the man means what he says. Indeed, though Republican newspapers have endeavored to draw attention from Blaine's public record, by circulating a scandalous story of a personal nature regarding Cleveland, there yet shines out the fact that, not only in his public utterances, but in every public act, Cleveland has shown himself to proceed with a scrupulous conscientiousness; while, on the contrary, there are incidents in Mr. Blaine's record that his best friends dare not discuss. The letters of the two men are like the two men. Blaine's artful, smart,—a very fine policy letter; Cleveland's brief, straightforward,—a letter that means exactly what it says. In Mr. Blaine's case there stands not only the fact that he has grown rich, and that he has had no other visible means of accumulating money than political position, but there also come in the Mulligan letters, which prove beyond a doubt to any fair-minded inquirer that Mr. Blaine bartered his influence as Speaker of the House of Representatives, and thereby made money.

THERE is one suggestion in Gov. Cleveland's letter of acceptance, that should receive the attention of the next Congress without fail, and that is that the presidential tenure should be limited to one term. This one term should be made to extend through eight years or through six years at least, but one term should be all. Then we might hope that presidents once elected, would use their patronage and power only for the best interests of the people. Their ambition would be to so conduct the government as to win the best praises of the best men. They would not then, as now, conduct the government and parcel out the patronage with a view to securing a second nomination.

Not only in the presidency, but in minor elective State and county offices there should be a fixed tenure, and the tenure should in nearly every instance be double the time now existing. There is nothing more demoralizing under our system of government, then the frequency of elections. If the tenure of all offices were made longer, we would have better officers, because the holders of office would learn with experience better how to fulfill their duties. If the tenure of all offices was limited to one term, we would have better office holders, because they would devote themselves to the performance of their duties, and not to "playing pipes" to secure a second election.

JAMES G. BLAINE entered Congress a poor man. He is now conceded to be worth two millions of dollars. Even one million of Dollars is an immense fortune; so great indeed is a million of dollars, that only men who have started early and who have devoted their entire lives to the carrying out of great undertakings, honestly accumulate so great an amount. But Mr. Blaine has not spent his life in forwarding any great business enterprise. His life has been devoted to politics. And yet he has grown vastly rich. How? The manner of his getting rich has never been explained. The Mulligan letters throw more light upon the matter than any other documents. On account of these Mulligan letters a great number of the best men in the Republican party have refused to vote for Mr. Blaine. It is always safe to distrust the man who grows rich in politics. It is almost like the camel going through the eye of a needle, for a man to grow rich honestly in political life.

THE Peninsula editors last week took a holiday; at least quite a number of them did so. Those who took the holiday are benefitted in several respects by having done so. In the first place, the relaxation from work has recuperated them and given them renewed energies for work. In the second place, they have been brought into social relationship, and each editor has learned what a really good set of fellows his brethren of the Peninsula press are. In the third place, the coming together has tended to excite an honorable emulation, and to inspire each newspaper man with a desire to make his paper better. Those of the editors who stayed at home missed a very good thing. If they had come along they would have been made happy in spite of themselves, no matter how much melancholy biliousness they may have brought with them.

THE Republican Congressional Convention for the first district meets in Cambridge to day. It is understood that Mr. George M. Russum of Denton will be made happy by receiving a unanimous nomination. The Republican nomination has no great number of enthusiastic seekers. Indeed the other gentlemen beside Mr. Russum who have been mentioned, it is understood have magnanimously declined, and Mr. Russum has a very easy walk over to the honor.

THE trouble in the second Maryland district over the nomination of a candidate for Congress is to be remedied by the members of the State Central Committees for the four counties, who will meet in Baltimore on Monday and provide for the calling of a new convention.
