A prominent lawyer now practising in this city tells the following:

'An old darkey was under indictment for some trival offense and was without counsel.—The judge appointed me to defend him. I was young and very fresh at the time, and it was my first case in court.

'As I went forward to consult with my client, he turned to the judge and said:

"Yo' Honah, am dis de lawyer what am depointed to offend me?'

'Yes,' was the reply.

"Well,' said the old darkey, 'take hit 'way, jedge; I pleads guilty.'—N. Y. World.

Hundreds of letters from those using Ayer's Hair Vigor attest its value as a restorer of gray hair to its natural color. As a stimulant and tonic, preventing and often curing baldness, and cleansing and soothing the scalp, its use cannot be too strongly recommended.

A young nobleman of marriageable age not long ago came to the conclusion that it was time for him to look out for a wife. His pursuit in life not being of the most strenuous character, he had leisure to combine amusement with research. Accordingly he advertised his wants in a Milanese paper, requesting that every answer to the advertisement be accompanied by the portrait of the lady who replied.

The result was sixty-five letters with as many maidenly countenances as would furnish a good-sized album. Embarrassed by a choice of such unexpected variety, and desirous to gratify that sense of humor which even the serious nature of his quest could not repress, the young man replied to each of his correspondents.

Without the knowledge of the others he sent a ticket for an orchestra stall in the Scala theatre, announcing that he himself would be in a particular box, the number and situation of which he stated. A few evenings later the theatre-going public of Milan were perplexed to explain the appearance of one of the rows of the orchestra stalls in that immense building.

A long line of beauties in extreme elegance, unbroken by a single black coat, was observed. Furtively, and with trepidation, did each damsel from time to time raise her opera glass to that box—the cynosure of many bright eyes—in which the graceful youth reposed. Suspiciously, and with darkened brow, did each damsel turn to the long file of her neighbors, and wondered at the magnetism which drew each glass to the central post.

By-and-by the audience, to whom some hint of the secret had leaked out, began to give audible signs that they enjoyed the joke. The sporadic laughter of the theatre increased the confusion of the young ladies, and the contagion of the fun turned the sporadic mirth into a general roar.—Anon.

You Can Have It.

"My dear, what would I give to have your hair?" is often said by middle-aged ladies to young ones. Madam, you may have just such hair. Parker's Hair Balsam will give it to you. It will stop your hair from falling off, restore the original color and make it long, thick, soft and glossy. You need not stand helplessly envying the girls. The Balsam is not oily, not a dye, but is an elegant dressing, and is especially recommended for its cleanliness and purity.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

THE OLIVERS AT NA TUCKET.

BY JESSIE E. WRIGHT.

The Oliver family, after much discussion and some friction decided to spend the day at Nantucket.

There was Papa Oliver (of course he came first), and Mamma Oliver, and Lucretia Oliver, and Russell Taft Oliver, and Georgie Oliver—Georgie was a girl—and young Bancroft Oliver.

Mr. Oliver was always on the verge of enjoying himself—was going to just as soon as he saw that his business was all right, or when that was off his hands, as soon as he saw that Mrs. Oliver, or Lucretia, or Russell Taft, or Georgie or Bancroft was in a satisfactory condition.

Mrs. Oliver and the juveniles were always plunging headlong, in the highest of spirits, into the occupations of the moment, and were being continually astonished and surprised at finding that life was not just what, at the first look, it seemed to be.

The whole family had speculated on Nantucket. Very quaint they had heard. Bancroft was quite sure he should see the three Nantucket whalers of his picture book out on the beach, with their whales, to welcome him.—Georgie did not know what quaint meant, exactly.

As the steamer reached the dock, Russel Taft seemed deeply interested in something on the wharf.

'Papa, look at that man!' he cried.

A general buzz of 'the town crier' became audible, and, sure enough, there he was, butnut apron, a little flag, a great bell and a -horn. He rang his bell vigorously, and uted loud enough to be heard above the din d bustle on the wharf:

'Ladies and gem'men!—This is Nantucket! his steamer, Monohansett, leaves this wharf at hree o'clock. Ladies and gem'men, hear! Get your dinners where you can!'

Unutterable longing was in Russel Taft's eyes.

'Oh, if I were that man!'

And for full two minutes, even while the family were trying to leave the boat, he was lost in a dream of future greatness.

The family had not reached the end of the wharf before Papa Oliver found that his family circle was decreased by one. He hurried back, and found the missing link gazing with speechless admiration at a row of four bare-legged small boys sitting on the roof of the odd little restaurant. The boys grinned at him with a look of kindly superiority.

'Bancroft!' said Mr. Oliver, sternly, 'why did you leave your family?'

Bancroft, called to this lower world, seemed possessed of a dreadful idea. His jaw dropped, the sobs came, and he roared:

'I'm lost! oh, I'm lost!'

'Why, I'm here,' said his father.

'Oh, I'm lost!' was the only reply.

'The family is waiting,' urged Mr. Oliver, 'and you are not lost, for I'm here.'

An expression of doubt crossed Bancroft's face. He started another wail, 'I'm lo-o-o—' when his face cleared up like a summer's day. He said, pleasantly:

'Oh, are you? Well, I'm ready.'

And Mr. Oliver, vastly relieved, again rejoined his family.

'Papa,' said Mamma Oliver, 'we must all go out to the South Shore. You can go on the train, and it would be well for us to go, for I have counted, and we can all sit on the same seat.'

The idea seemed acceptable. Mr. Oliver stowed away his charge in the seat according to Mrs. Oliver's plan.

'Mamma,' said Lucretia, 'I heard it was very good bathing at the South Shore, and we must all go in.'

Mrs. Oliver was delighted.

'Yes,' she said, with calm dignity, 'I intend to learn to swim.'

As soon as they reached the South Shore, Mr. Oliver established his family and went in search of bath-houses and bathing suits.

The beach was covered with people, and a few were in bathing. The surf was fine.

When the houses and suits were finally secured, great commotion reigned. Mr. Oliver had discovered that people there generally went in with ropes, and he speedily secured five.—Life-preservers he believed were necessary, and he got five of those. 'My family must be safe,' he meditated.

Russel Taft was ready first. He plunged into the surf and astonishment was his only emotion. It knocked him down and was cold.

'Papa, I'm all wet!' he howled.

Mr. Oliver was rushing toward him with a rope. He had no sooner tied one safely around Russel Taft than Georgie came out. Georgie went for the water somewhat higher up.

'You must have a rope, Georgie,' called the chattering Russel Taft. 'Mustn't she, papa?'

Mr. Oliver was struggling to catch Georgie before she should be carried to sea; yet, the rope tied to Russel Taft would not allow him to reach Georgie, who showed no signs of coming to him. He started for Georgie. As a consequence, a shriek from Russel Taft and his sudden disappearance under a breaker. But Papa Oliver reached Georgie, and tied a rope to her. With these two ropes in his hand, he made a wild dash for Bancroft, who regarded the rope as an insult, having, perhaps, some dim recollection of the days when he was tethered to the old apple tree in the summer and the table-leg in winter.

Lucretia submitted more gracefully, and Mrs. Oliver regarded it as her only safety.

Tying the ropes on them was not the only thing necessary. Holding the ends of the five ropes in his hand, he could hardly tell which was which, and when he saw Georgie going into too deep water and tried to pull her out, his wife would cry out in an aggrevated tone, 'Quit pulling me.'

He thought he would mend matters a little by tying Bancroft's rope to his mother's. No sooner had he congratulated himself on the success of his plan, than Bancroft started for the beach, and his mother started for deeper water. Both parties came to a dead stop. Bancroft's face was horror stricken.

'A whale's got me! A whale's got me!' he screamed.

Of course the spectators set up a laugh. Mr. Oliver had to use considerable persuasion before he could get the couple near enough together to untie them.

'Papa, I shall drown, unless you pull me in this minute!' bubbled Lucretia, as three waves in succession had overwhelmed her with salt water.

Papa Oliver gave an anxious pull; the sudden eclipse of Russel Taft's yellow head was the only result. The next trial seemed to have some effect on Lucretia, and he pulled her in, hand over hand, till he saw Georgie's rope had slipped out to sea. In his struggles to get that, his wife's dropped, and she immediately declared she had seen her last hour. In the midst of the turmoil, Bancroft, with yards of rope trailing behind him, came flying into the water.

Russel Taft was blubbering out reproaches. The people were laughing with one accord.—These excitements were too much for Mr. Oliver's temper.

'If I ever try this foolery again my family'll know it!' he exclaimed.

But gradually the ropes were put in running order again, and a moderate amount of peace returned to the paternal breast.

When they were all blue with cold, they decided that they had had enough of bathing.

Mrs. Oliver declared her nerves were quite shaken up, and that after they had finished their dinner, the one thing for the Oliver family to do was to go back and sit on the wharf till the boat came. And this they did, Mamma Oliver's smiles came back as she grew warmer on the dock. Papa Oliver felt less responsibility. The children all managed to come as near killing themselves as was compatible with good health. 'And anyway,' cried the family in a chorus, as the boat started off, 'we've been to Nantucket!'

ALABASTINE
A Superior Substitute for Kalsomine, etc.
Alabastine is the first and only preparation made from calcined gypsum rock, for application to walls with a brush, and is fully covered by patents and perfected by many years of experiments. It is the only permanent wall finish, and admits of applying as many coats as desired, one over another, to any hard surface, without danger of scaling, or noticeably adding to the thickness of the wall, which is strengthened and improved by each additional coat, from time to time. It is the only material for the purpose not dependent upon glue for its adhesiveness. Alabastine is hardened on the wall by age, moisture, etc., while all kalsomines or whitening preparations have inert soft chalks and glue for their base, which are rendered soft or scaled in a very short time.
In addition to the above advantages, Alabastine is less expensive, as it requires but one-half the number of pounds to cover the same amount of surface with two coats, is ready for use by adding water, and easily applied by any one.
