WIT, HUMOR AND WISDOM.

"BLESSED IS HE WHO CAN UNDERSTAND A JOKE, FOR VERILY THERE BE SOME WHO KNOW NOT A JOKE WHEN THEY SEE IT."
—A more or less ancien proverb.

This country isn't half big enough for the man whose wife is chasing him around the block with a chair leg.—Fall River Advance.

'What you doin' now, Bill?'
'Nothin'. Been doin' of it for three weeks and I can't stand it much longer.
'What you goin' to do?'
'Git somebody to help me.'—Burdette.

'Husband,' said Mrs. Smith the other night, fixing her eyes significantly upon the seven-year-old pride of the family. 'I am afraid you will have to correct Johnny; he has been a bad boy this afternoon.'
Husband, glancing over his paper—What has he been doing?
'He took his Shawlneck rooster over to Mrs. Jones's, and Tom Jones got out his Black Spanish, and they let the poor creatures fight for more than an hour.'
Husband, straightening up—Which whipped?—N. Y. Sun.

A little fellow in this city who is very much exercised over the Presidential situation went to his mother last evening and, with a mournful face, said to her:
'Mamma, do you think there will be another war?'
'I don't know, my son.'
'Well, will papa have to go and fight again?'
'I can't really tell.'
Then, with great desperation, the little fellow blurted out:
'Oh, I'll be darned if I don't pray to-night.' And he did—Anon.

'He's got 'em on! He's got 'em on!' triumphantly exclaimed young Johnny Jarphly at the breakfast table.
'Got wot on?' asked his mother in surprise. 'What ails you, Johnny? What are you peeking under the table for? Why don't you sit up straight and eat your meal?'
'Pah's got 'em on! I see 'em!' emphatically asserted Jarphly's heir.
'Got wot on, sir? Wot are you talking about?' sternly asked his father.'
'Why, you got your pants on, and I heard Mr. Smiff say he thought Mah wore 'em.'—Pittsburgh Telegraph,

'Let's cross the street and meet that fellow again,' said a man to a companion with whom he was walking.
'Why didn't you speak just now if you have business with him?'
'I have no business with him.'
'Then why do you wish to meet him again.'
'Well, you see I used to owe him, and in consequence would avoid meeting him. Recently I paid him up, and now I like to meet him. It's like Mark Twain's story of the boy who found a dime. He kept throwing it out in front of him to find it again. Come on, I want to meet him. I wish I had nothing to do but to meet him all day.'—Arkansaw Traveler.

His heart was full of a burning desire to say something not only complimentary but brilliantly suggestive, so after revolving the matter in his mind during a ten-minute burst of silence he said, gazing into the crackling fire:
'Ah, Miss Eunice, why is the andiron so like myself?'
And Miss Eunice, looking so solemnly demure that the clock stopped, said that she did not know, unless it was because it had a brass head.
He was groping blindly for the front door before she could catch her breath, and it didn't appear to relieve him a bit when she followed him down the hall to tell him that she wasn't good at conundrums, anyhow. He only went out into the starlight and held his throbbing temples by the bits, and wished that he had died when he was a laughing, innocent babe.—Hawkeye.

It has always been thought that ears of corn have an even number of rows, and that one with an odd number of rows would be an impossibility. In slavery times this question was discussed, and a negro in Kentucky claimed that he had seen ears of corn of that kind. His master told him he would give him his (the negro's) freedom for an ear of corn with an odd number of rows. This was in the early spring, but in the fall, during corn gathering time, the negro came with a round ear of corn with thirteen rows. He got his free papers. A long time afterward the old negro said that in roasting-ear time he took a sharp knife, cut out one row of grains, bound the ear together, and knew just where to find it when gathering time came.—Peoria Journal.

A young woman was suing her ex-sweetheart for breach of promise, and the lawyers were, as usual, making all sorts of inquisitive interrogatories.
'You say,' remarked one, 'that the defendant frequently sat very close to you?'
'Yes, sir,' was the reply with a hectic flush.
'How close?'
'Close enough, so's one cheer was all the sittin' room we needed,'
'And you say he put his arm around you?'
'No, I didn't.'
'What did you say?'
'I said he put both arms around me.'
'Then what?'
'He hugged me.'
'Very hard?'
'Yes, he did. So hard that I came purty near hollering right out.'
'Why didn't you holler?'
'Cause.'
'That's no reason. Be explicit, please. Because what?'
'Cause I was afraid he'd stop.'
The Court fell off the bench, and had to be carried out and put under the hydrant for the purpose of resuscitation.—Anon.

A politician and a quiet-looking person sat at a table in the Griswold House dining-room last night. The politician turned to the unassuming stranger and asked:
'What do you think of the political situation?'
'I have retired from politics. I never discuss it any more.
'Retired? May I ask when?'
'You may. I was out in Wyoming a month ago, and a dozen cowboys and myself were attempting to discuss the merits of the national candidates. I touched upon the brilliant war record of Logan, when a burly cow-puncher six feet five interrupted me by saying that it was a lie; Logan never saw a battle; he was a horse-thief up in the Laramie county.'
'You denied it, of course?'
The modest gentleman laid down his knife and fork, took a long draught of coffee, wiped his mouth, and then gazing long and earnestly at the politician, replied:
'Stranger, if you should ever talk politics to a gentleman in Wyoming with a very strong aroma of bovine about his person, and he should assert that Arthur and Jesse James played poker together, or that Brigham Young and Henry Ward Beecher ran on a presidential ticket in 1860, just agree with him and turn the conversation into other channels. Stranger, I am going back to Wyoming; that's why I'm out of politics.'

How he Got a Position.

'I applied for a position in a banking house in Wall street six months ago, and although I proved my competency, they would not take me. I had been down on my luck and looked old and shabby. An idea struck me. I got up a new growth of hair with Parker's Hair Balsam, raised a decent suit of clothes, applied again, and they took me in a minute.' So writes a clerk with $2,000 salary. The moral is plain. Parker's Hair Balsam gives a person a new face.

FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS.

Happy Accidents.

BY FAITH WYNNE.

Many accidents, very trifling in themselves, have led to the most valuable discoveries and inventions. Some of them, perhaps, are not so familiar to all of us as the fact that the swaying chandelier in a cathedral suggested to Galileo the application of the pendulum.

How few know that for the method of refining sugar with wet clay we are indebted to a hen! Having just returned from a promenade over a neighboring moist clay bank, she stepped into a ladle of brown sugar lying on the floor, and wherever her tracks were found the sugar was thoroughly whitened.

But if old Biddy's sojourn that day had been among those who having eyes see not, and having ears hear not, her valuable lesson would not have been learned. It is the observant only who put to use these 'trifles light as air.'

While holding a pair of spectacle-glasses between his thumb and finger, a watchmaker's apprentice was surprised at the sudden enlarged appearance of a near church spire, and thus was discovered the power of lenses as applied to telescopes, opera-glasses, etc.

The truth of the proverb that 'necessity is the mother of invention' was never more clearly proven, perhaps, than by the discovery of the art of lithography. The poverty of a musician induced him to try the experiment of etching music upon stone instead of copper. Just as he had his slab prepared for the trial, his mother asked him to make out a memorandum of clothes for the laundry. Pen, ink and paper being inconvenient, he wrote the list upon the stone with the etching preparation, intending to make a copy at his leisure. When about to clean the stone a few days later, he was suddenly seized with the desire to try the effect of aquafortis upon it, and lo! in a few moments the writing stood out in bold relief. The next step necessary was to ink the stone and take off the impression.

Tinted paper, so dear to the esthetic maiden's heart, had its origin in a very prosaic accident. The wife of an English paper-maker dropped a blue-bag into one of the vats of pulp, and was so frightened at the consternation it caused among the workmen, and at the anger of her husband, that she had not the courage to confess her carelessness, and the damaged paper was stored for several years, when it was sent to a London agent to be sold for what it would bring. The paper was accepted as a novelty, and disposed of quite profitably, and the manufacturer received an order for a large invoice of the same, whereupon the wife acknowledged the accident of the blue-bag, which in time led on to fortune.

A glass-cutter accidentally spilled a few drops of aquafortis upon his eye-glasses, and noticed that they became corroded and softened thereby. He put on his thinking cap, and the result was a drawing of a set of figures upon glass with varnish, afterward applying the corroding fluid and cutting away the glass around the drawing. When the varnish was removed, the figures appeared raised upon a dark ground.

A paper-maker one day strolled through a field, and thoughtlessly plucked a few straws and put them in his mouth, where, to his surprise, they were soon reduced to a pulpy matter, closely resembling the substance from which paper is made. He set to work to try the experiment in his mill, and after great perseverance, paper was manufactured out of straw.

The Story of Little Joe.

[From the Chicago Herald.]

Passing through town night before last was a frontiersman who bore in his arms a great bundle. The careless observer on a hasty glance could not have told what it contained, so unlike was it to anything in particular but a collection of shawls and blankets. A close inspection, however, would have revealed beneath the folds the wasted form of a child.

Sitting in the Unioa depot waiting for the train for the East, the Westerner held his bundle carefully so that the gaslight would not reach the lad's eyes. As he was shifting his position he said in reply to the inquiry of a bystander:

'No, he ain't sick, mister. He's just hurted. Didn't you never hear of it? Well, now, that's quar. It was in all the newspapers in the Black Hills country. This here is little Joe, of the Homestake claim. Never heard of him? Lemme tell you something, then, and don't you never forget it. Will you?'

'Never,' was the responce.

'Well, sir, away back last February, when the snow was three-foot deep and the blizzards was a-howling, our cabin got afire one night, and it was just as much as ever that we got out of it with our lives. We were about nine miles from Deadwood and we set out on foot for that town. After we had gone a ways we found that the snow was so almighty deep that we was liable to be stalled. There was a crust on it and we'd break through up to our necks in places. Only little Joe got along all right. He didn't weight much more'n a bag a dust, and he skimmed alorg on top like a fly. Finally, when we couldn't go no further in the cold and the snow, he says: 'You just go back, boys, and keep up the fire, and I'll be back yere agin in less'n twelve hours with grub, and I'll have the boys in Deadwood come after us to-morrow.'

'God bless his little soul! I mind just how he looked that minite. There wan't no use of our trying to go ahead, so we let him go alone and we went back, and heaping wood on the fire made by our cabin tried to keep warm.—Along toward midnight we began to feel powerful hungry, and to wonder what had become of Joe, when all of a sudden we heard a faint calling.

''It's a bird,' says some one.

''No, it ain't,' says I. 'It's little Joe.'

'We listened and heard it again. The wind was whistling almighty cold, but there was no mistaking his voice. Two or three or us sprang out into the snow and made as fast as we could towards the place where we thought the voice came from. Pretty soon we heard it again off to one side, and, wading through the drifts, we found him. He had fallen into the holes we had made in the crust in the morning and was so weak and stiff he couldn't get out. So he lay there and yelled. He had grub strapped on him, but I picked him up in my arms and we carried him in to the fire. Both of his feet were frozen, and he was unconscious when we took his burden off of him. All that night we rubbed him and cried over him, and the next morning, when the boys from Deadwood broke through with their hosses, we loaded him up and took him to town. The doctors had to cut off one of his feet, but he mended rapidly and soon got so he could sit up. This fall we had a meeting and decided that Joe should not stay at the mine this winter, but go East and be taken keer of at a hospital in New York, and that's what I'm doing now. We'll have him back in the spring, and if there's anything in the camp he wants, its his for all time.

The Old Oak and the Little Christmas-Tree.

'It's very cold this morning,' said a little Christmas-tree out in the forest, one windy December day; 'though I'm fir from head to foot I am all in a shiver.'

'You'll be warm enough before long,' said the Old Oak, 'I've seen the woodman looking at you several times lately.'

'I know I've branched out a good deal for myself the past year,' said the little Tree proudly, 'and I should not wonder if Santa Claus were very well satisfied with me, when I come to be all dressed up for a Christmas party.'

'Ho-ho-ho!' laughed the Old Oak, 'you and your family are too green; you should have put on brown dingy jackets like the rest of us, and then you might live to a green old age, as I shall.'

Just then the Woodman appeared.

'Well!' cried the little Christmas-tree, as the Woodman bore it away, 'its a great honor to be chosen, and Christmas comes but once a year.'

ALABASTINE
A Superior Substitute for Kalsomine, etc.
Alabastine is the first and only preparation made from calcined gypsum rock, for application to walls with a brush, and is fully covered by patents and perfected by many years of experiments. It is the only permanent wall finish, and admits of applying as many coats as desired, one over another, to any hard surface, without danger of scaling, or noticeably adding to the thickness of the wall, which is strengthened and improved by each additional coat, from time to time. It is the only material for the purpose not dependent upon glue for its adhesiveness. Alabastine is hardened on the wall by age, moisture, etc., while all kalsomines or whitewash preparations have inert soft chalks and glue as their base, which are rendered soft or scaled in a very short time.
In addition to the above advantages, Alabastine is less expensive, as it requires but one-half the number of pounds to cover the same amount of surface with two coats, is ready for use by adding water, and easily applied by any one.
For sale by your Paint Dealer. Ask for Circular containing Samples of 12 tints, manufactured only by the ALABASTINE CO., M. B. CHURCH, Manager, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Blooded Stock.
For sale by E. J. Plummer, Worton Md., as agent for the well-known importers and breeders, N. P. Boyer & Co., of Chester county Penn
Seventy-five head of Jersey Heifers in calf, for Sale Cheap.
To make room for new importations we will sell sevensy-five head of pure blood Jersey Heifers in calf, at $85 to $125 each, as to age, style and eariness in calving. They are all very large and handsome, good colors and finely developed in all points that go to make up a first-class dairy cow, for butter or milk. Are all from first-class thoroughbred Jersey cows, making 14 to 17½ pounds of butter per week, and are served by solid colored Herd Registered Jersey bulls. Due to calve in March, April, May and June.
These heifers are all sired by the celebrated Herd Registered Jersey Bulls, Lord Darnley No. 3730 Lowrie No. 2484, and Earl of Willow Glen No. 2843; all solid color, full black points. They have been served by Imported Devon bull No. 7910 (of the celebrated Cocmassie strain), one of the best young Jersey Bulls that ever left the Island. Rapier No. 3743, Winsome Boy No. 5496, Maurus No. 4639, and Hercy Douglas No. 3769. These bulls are all from the very deepest milking strains, and from the very best butter families. Solid colors, full black points. They cannot fail to produce very fine calves.
Carefully boxed, delivered on board the cars, free, with feed, &c., for their trip, warranted to reach purchasers safe. Also, for sale, thoroughbred and imported sheep; thoroughbred and imported hogs; improved breeds of poultry. Full information as to prices may be had upon inquiry of
