he said to her on this subject, and that the subject may never be discussed with her or in company that will be apt to repeat the conversation.

It is my desire that the few remaining days left her may not be harassed even by unnecessary trouble, and I make the suggestion to you knowing you will heartily acquiesce in the motives which dictate it.

Give my affectionate regards to Allie and believe me ever

Yours

W. H. Emory