Orthography to which they are adapted in Murray's Eng. Exercises; perused his Etymology, and in Syntax, has thoroughly studied all the Rules, both principal and subordinate, and applied them also in the Correction of False Syntax, in Murray's Exercises, to which they are likewise adapted.

He has Completed the Grammatical, and studied the Historical part of Adams' S. Geography; in addition to which he has studied "Marsh's Book-Keeping by Double Entry"; all the Definitions of Mc. Intire on the use of the Globes, and Fifteen Problems on the Terrestrial Globe, together with the greatest portion of Goldsmith's Roman History.

To these branches may be added in the E. Department, Mensuration, Surveying, Navigation, &c. In short Sir, I feel no hesitation in saying, that a boy may be qualified in the Eng. Department, to enter any Academy, to study the Languages, or to fill any station in life, which an Eng. Education will qualify him for. For any errors ~~in~~ which I may have made in my statement to you, I feel perfectly willing to be corrected by your son. But Sir, I have troubled you too long already, longer than I should have done, had not your Letter seemed to require a minute detail.

Should I be so fortunate as to secure your approbation I shall be very happy to be aided by your influence, in promoting the prosperity of Our Institution. And should you design your son for the Classics, I think you may find a faithful Preceptor in the person of Mr. Fr. Neely, the Principal of Our Academy. With sincere acknowledgements for your past patronage, I subscribe myself

Dr. Sir.

respectfully

Thomas Pierson.
