The kind of clothes that make the fellow inside them throw back his shoulders, throw out his chest and hold up his head in the consciousness that he is well dressed and not merely clothed.

Broad, padded shoulders, well-tailored collars that set snugly, full, roomy coats, good, honest materials, and plenty of swing and style to them—these are the earmarks of H. K. & Co. Clothes.

Test this statement, if you please. Compare them with any other $3.00 Oxfords—note the superiority of the leather, the finish; observe the graceful lines, the snug fit at the heel, the general air of high-gradedness—and you'll admit that we are not overstating our case.

Sunk at Betterton.

A fine yacht belonging to a former well known hotel man in Philadelphia sank at the old wharf in Betterton on Saturday night with $1500 worth of fine furniture and $500 worth of champagne, whiskey and beer aboard. The yacht reached Betterton last Tuesday week, and while lying stern in toward shore, the heavy gale and sea caused her to pound so heavily that she sank. The owner of the yacht was on his way to Cape Charles City, Va., where he had purchased a large acreage of oyster bottoms to engage in oyster planting. He had sold the liquors to a dealer in Norfolk, Va., and was delivering same on his yacht. The furniture was a part of his splendidly furnished home in Philadelphia, which he was carrying to his new home. It is thought that the vessel will be a total loss. She is 60 ft. long, and very handsomely and thoroughly equipped. The liquors, or a part of them at least are at the bottom of the bay, and we are told that a quantity of it has gone to the fishes, while a small part of it found its way ashore. It is understood that the owner of the yacht will make an effort to have her raised by a pile driver now at work upon the piers when it shall have discharged its contract, but good boatmen from Betterton think the boat will be a total loss, because the heavy seas and strong winds have had a bad effect. The yacht is owned by S. B. Hillman, of Philadelphia, and the loss upon furniture and boat is estimated at $3,500. Latest advices say she is a total wreck.
