Do We Need A Curfew Law?

For many reasons we feel constrained to reply in the affirmative. It would protect home life. Many parents are heartbroken because the boys and girls insist upon spending the evening hours on the street. The curfew law would greatly aid in such cases. Some homes are everything but inviting. There is nothing about them to keep the children n. The law would keep the children where they belong, and this in turn would create a disposition to make the home more congenial.

Officers and teachers in the public schools are advocating it, because it insures better work in the class room. The children study in the evening and retire earlier, which prepares them for the duties of the school. If for no other reason, every city and town ought to have this law. Wherever it has been enacted the opinion is the same.

It is a help to philanthropy. We have very few laws that apply directly to the moral welfare of our communities. There are any number relating to the financial matters of local, county and state administration, but too few that apply to the upbuilding of character. Let us have this one by all means.

Business houses often complain that young people coming to work in the morning give evidence of insufficient sleep. It is not strange, for the streets n which this law has not been enacted, are apt to be lined with young people every evening. If these boys and girls could be kept at home, it would not only improve their morals, but it would rest them for the duties of life.

It should never be forgotten that the boys and girls in our schools will soon be the men and women. Time passes very rapidly. If we do not save the boys and girls we cannot expect to have good men and women. The coming generation will be very largely what we make it.

The above is taken from the Union Signal and applies with force to conditions in Chestertown.
