hour of the morning session of the Friday next after the first Monday of each month of the scholastic year, (1) for the purpose of fostering a sentiment of patriotism in the minds of the pupils, and for instruction in the system of our Municipal, State and National Government, as they represent the great majority of the people, by presenting those main features of the system of government which no citizen can afford to be without, and by asking and answering the questions why the Public Schools are maintained, etc., also in the hope that the children and youth may be induced to emulate their virtues; (2) for some notice befitting the work wrought in the community by skillful, thoughtful, high-minded citizens who put the public good above their private advantage; patriots of the city, including John T. Morris, Esq., whose portrait graces the walls of many of our school-houses, and whose face is as familiar as household words to the pupils, who has earned the right to retire as School Commissioner and has expressed his wish to do so, after thirty-five years of faithful, efficient, unremunerated public service, and who will doubtless cherish as his most beneficent reward the consciousness that he has deserved at the hands of the whole people of Baltimore their approbation.
