June 1809. Mr Randolph, in the course of his speech on his motion to approbate the conduct of the President, observed "that his object was the public weal, nor should he be diverted from this path to his right (Mr Jackson of Virginia) or to his left (Mr Fisk of N. York) to shoot little game that would hardly requite the toil of the fowler."

June 1, 1809. A remarkable year for locust-flies.
1st June, 1809, Thursday — Mr Ross, a new member from Pennsylvania, in his maiden speech on the approbatory motion of Mr Randolph, said "that on a question of such moment he could not remain silent without making a few observations." In the course of his speech he spoke of "those who lived "before the antediluvian world!"
