WILSON STRONG, SAYS O'GORMAN

Senator Sure He Can Carry State of New York.

COULD WIN IN NEW ENGLAND.

Senator Gardner of Maine Indorses New York Colleague's View That New Jersey Governor Is Strong in Sections Where Foes Say He Is Weak.

[Atlanta (Ga.) Journal.]

Senator O'Gorman of New York declares that Woodrow Wilson if chosen the Democratic nominee can carry that state against any Republican.

A weightier comment on present day politics has not been made. It crushes the flimsy pretension that Woodrow Wilson's candidacy would lose or imperil the party's chance in New York state and indicates his strength in the strategic center of the east as well as in the west and the south.

Coming from a leader of Senator O'Gorman's prestige and farsightedness, this estimate is particularly significant. He is the titular head of the Democracy of New York, a state that has ninety votes in the nominating convention and forty-five votes in the electoral college, the state for which both parties strive most vigorously in presidential years as the key to national success. He has the support of Tammany Hall, but he is immeasurably beyond and above the system with which Tammany is identified in the public mind. He is versed in practical politics, but he is also a statesman of spotless record and of rare ability, so much so indeed that when he was called to the senate the people as a whole, regardless of party connections, rejoiced that the duties of the office had fallen upon a man so eminently fitted to bear them.

Of all the Democratic nominees yet suggested Woodrow Wilson would not only stand the largest chance to carry New York, but, according to the recent testimony of Senator Gardner of Maine, he is the only Democrat who could win portions of New England.

From the clear headed testimony of these two eminent Democrats, Senator O'Gorman of New York and Senator Gardner of Maine, it is evident that Governor Wilson is particularly strong in the very places wherein his foes would have us believe he is fatally weak.

When to this fact is added the confidence and the following he has won over the country as a whole there can be no fair minded doubt that of all the aspirants in the field he is by far the best fitted both as a statesman and a candidate.

GOVERNOR WILSON FAVORED BY NEW YORK DEMOCRATS

[From the Brooklyn Citizen, April 15, 1912.]

The Jefferson birthday dinner in Manhattan on Saturday night was not designed to make capital for Governor Wilson, although it had that effect. His speech was the most weighty utterance of the occasion, and the temper of the party in this relation was plainly enough indicated by the manner in which it was received. While it would be quite at variance with the truth to say that anything occurred to justify the prediction that the delegation from New York will vote for Wilson at the outset, it is well within the truth to say that the whole demonstration afforded evidence of the acceptability to the rank and file as well as to the heads of the party in this part of the country.

Nor was Mr. Bryan's address without significance in this relation. Careful as the ex-leader was not to commit himself to one progressive rather than another, he made it entirely clear that he was prepared to support Governor Wilson with unqualified heartiness. What was particularly noticeable was the manifestation of satisfaction with Wilson by many of our chief men of business. Hitherto it has been suggested that, while he was manifestly popular with the toiling masses, he might have to encounter considerable opposition from the so called captains of industry.

What happened Saturday night may be said to dispose of this latter fear, so far as the metropolis is concerned. There was capital enough in evidence at the dinner to warrant the belief that Governor Wilson will have no lack of honest support from our wealthier Democrats if he obtains the nomination at Baltimore by the good will of the main body of the Democracy. In other words, what appeared is that so far at least as the Empire State is concerned, the party will be united and confident of success in case the ticket is headed by Governor Wilson. This, it is true, does not mean that it would be either disunited or disheartened if some other candidate were chosen. That is not the spirit in which the Democracy of New York is approaching the struggle.

But the point remains good that with Wilson to lead there will be no ground for misgivings about the Democracy of the state of New York. His friends in other parts of the country may go forward with the assurance that the movement in his favor has been steadily growing in strength in this state and is in no danger of reaction between now and the time of the convention. The vote on Saturday in Pennsylvania, when both factions of the Democracy made him their candidate, was not uncharacteristic of the feeling prevailing among regular Democrats of all shades of opinion in New York. There is not the least ground for doubting that if the question were submitted to the party primaries Wilson would be first choice by a very large majority.

SPIRIT OF THE TIMES TYPIFIED BY WILSON

Iowa Pleased at Solution of Present Problem.

[Des Moines (Ia.) News.]

Woodrow Wilson typifies the new spirit of the times in things political. He is the embodiment of the new thought in the nation.

This clear headed and profound scholar brought to the Iowa people a message of hope and good cheer. He came carrying the standard of a progressive army of thoughtful Americans, fully determined that whatever else may happen it shall be brought about that this shall again be a government by and for the people.

In his Coliseum address the governor properly assumed that there are tendencies in American life that are wrong, that evils have grown up, that we have got away from the moorings of a free government. No need to discuss these things. But what is the remedy?

He analyzed the problem with the dispassionate logic of the great university teacher before his class. He was especially happy in his characterization of the problem as one relating to "privileged business" rather than "big business," for it is not size so much as it is the enjoyment of special privilege that makes some business destructive of all that is good in commercial and political life. He was right, too, in leading back to the original source and refuge of all special privilege—the protective tariff.

Without attempting to go into details he pointed out that the remedy that we all are seeking must be secured, if at all, through agencies that are free to act. No axiom of the school books could be plainer.

Woodrow Wilson brought to Iowa people a message they hear with eagerness because they want just such a message. He spoke from the standpoint of the lifelong and earnest student of world politics, as one who has approached the subject with ripened intellect and well trained mind and following the eternal principles of truth, has reached a conclusion that cannot be assailed. Without any oratorical flourishes he held his audience entranced. He said nothing but that which he knew to be true. He made no use of merely fine sounding phrases It was cold logic, yet told in simple and direct language.

Here, then, is the new man in politics, a man come as a prophet among us to preach the new gospel. We have come upon a new time, when things are different, when the problems are not what they once were, when the people are eager for some discussion of present day politics in the light of present day conditions. That is why Woodrow Wilson's message to Iowa people was so refreshing, so inspiring so helpful.

Whatever else they may do, the Iowa people, without regard to the particular party tag they are just now wearing, with small consideration for the grandfathers' prejudices, owe to Woodrow Wilson a vote of thanks for the battle line and shown us that which lies just beyond.
