J. P. MORGAN IS AGAINST WILSON

Moneyed Interests Behind Fight to Prevent His Nomination.

STATEMENT BY COL. A. S. BACON

Champ Clark's Connection With the Financial Powers Is Traced Through Ex-Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota—Why They Hate the Governor of New Jersey.

In a booklet written by Colonel Alexander S. Bacon of New York and issued by the Woodrow Wilson management J. P. Morgan & Co., with other money interests, are specifically charged with being behind the fight against Governor Wilson.

Colonel Bacon traces the connection through ex-Senator Richard Francis Pettigrew of South Dakota, one of the leading managers of the Champ Clark cause. Pettigrew has written many letters for circulation through the middle west, saying things which the Wilson people declare are untrue.

Senator Pettigrew, Colonel Bacon says, has always been a servant to James J. Hill and the Hill railroads and has boasted that Hill enabled him to make half a million dollars. Now, says Colonel Bacon:

The bankers for the Hill lines and the interests for years identified with the Hill properties are J. P. Morgan & Co. The fact that Pettigrew is taking the lead in this crusade against Wilson lends considerable weight to an impression that is pretty general as to the real forces fighting Wilson. Wilson is the one man, above all, whom the special interests are determined to defeat.

The financial powers hate him not only because they regard Wilson as a "dangerous man" but because they regard him as "a traitor to his class." They hate him for his attempts to democratize Princeton; for his refusal to let their representative, ex-Senator James Smith, return to the United States senate; for the popular measures he has placed upon the statute books in New Jersey; for his refusal to use their money for campaign purposes. They hoped for better things than this from Woodrow Wilson; at first they regarded him as one of themselves—taking the popular side, Wilson has unclassed himself.

Above all, these forces know that once Wilson is elected they will lose control of the government. Senator Pettigrew is precisely the type of man these forces would select to serve their ends.

The plan of campaign engineered against Wilson is no secret. Pettigrew is loudly campaigning for Speaker Clark. Pettigrew and his fellow campaigners, however, care nothing for Clark. Wall street cares nothing for Clark. Had Pettigrew all the electoral votes in his hands at this moment he would not cast them for Clark. What Wall street wants to do is to defeat Wilson. It has collected a large campaign fund, not to nominate Clark, but to destroy the New Jersey man.

Likewise politicians of the moneyed interests are pushing the candidates of several men all against Wilson. As the sugar trust years ago testified that it contributed to the campaign of both parties, so the Wall street financiers are now supplying money to the backers of Underwood, Harmon and Clark. They realize that there is only one national candidate—Wilson. Clark, Underwood and Harmon have followings only in certain localities, while Wilson is strong in every state. They have therefore determined as a fixed policy to use the favorite sons in states where they are especially strong merely as tools to keep the delegates from Wilson. Underwood is strong in Alabama, and as a southern man naturally finds favor in other southern states.

Mr. Harmon is presumably popular in Ohio and perhaps in the several eastern stand pat states, so Wall street pushes Harmon ahead in these quarters, keeping Underwood and Clark out of the struggle. Similarly Clark ought to be strong in the west, and so the anti-Wilson managers push his candidacy in these sections. It is in a campaign of this kind that men like Pettigrew, in spite of his record, have a certain usefulness.

The first part of Colonel Bacon's letter answers the charges so freely made by Pettigrew, Hearst and George Fred Williams of Massachusetts. According to William Randolph Hearst, the chief backer of Champ Clark, Wilson is "a federalist." According to George Fred Williams, he is "a horrible tory." One of Pettigrew's accusations is that Wilson was brought up in an atmosphere of great wealth; he was "president of an aristocratic college, located in New Jersey, in an atmosphere of trusts and political corruption."

Colonel Bacon points out that Wilson's father was a poor Presbyterian preacher and that the boy's bringing up was simple and democratic. He quotes from Wilson's books and magazine articles to show that politically he is the exact opposite of a "federalist" and "a horrible tory."

After saying that Governor Wilson at Princeton fought for Democracy Colonel Bacon goes on to tell how the moneyed interests, "which control the institution," proved too much for Wilson, and in October, 1910, Wilson resigned and "transferred his battle for Democracy to another field."

Salina (Kan.) Union: "Those Democrats who oppose the nomination of Governor Wilson as the Democratic candidate for the presidency should advance some better reason than that he has changed his mind or shifted his point of view on political issues. The man who stands today where he has always stood on all political questions is too much of a Bourbon to deserve the support of Democratic voters."
