ROTATION OF CROPS

Reply to a Michigan Correspondent

"I am growing sugar beets and my land seems to be decreasing in production. What rotation can I use?"

In some localities it has been found that beets do best following alfalfa, corn and small grains. A very good rotation is as follows: First, wheat; second year, beets; then clover for two years, last crop being plowed under; then potatoes, and the rotation repeated. If alfalfa can be grown in your locality it is a good plan to include this in the rotation.

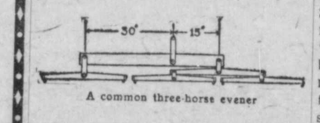

In Montana the best rotation for beet raising is as follows: Wheat, clover, oats, sugar beets, barley and peas. In Utah the following rotation gives good satisfaction: First year, sugar beets; second year, peas and oats for forage; third year, sugar beets; fourth year, oats, seeded to alfalfa; fifth year, alfalfa.

THREE-HORSE HITCHES

A Kansas correspondent writes: "In making a three-horse evener for a disk, I would like to know where the hole should be bored. Should two-thirds of the evener be given to the single horse to make an even distribution of the pull, or should it be measured from the outside of the singletree?"

You will experience but little difficulty in dividing the load equally among the horses if you take into consideration the fact that the amount of work each horse does is in proportion to the lever arm or the portion of the doubletree given to him. In the case of three horses the third horse, or one which works singly, in order to do the same amount of work as the other two, should be given twice the length of lever arm as the team. The length of the evener and also the length of the singletrees will depend upon the size of the horses and also whether you desire working them close together or somewhat spread out. For summer work the horses will stand the heat a little better if given plenty of room. This is advisable where conditions are such that more room can be given and at the same time not hinder accomplishing the work satisfactorily.

You will note in illustration No. 1, that the third horse is given thirty inches of the lever arm, while the other two are given only fifteen. This distance is satisfactory for medium-sized horses. Where larger teams are to be used, it should be increased accordingly.

A common three-horse evener

Sometimes it is necessary in working young animals, or light horses, to give them an advantage. This can be done by increasing the length of the lever arm. There is no set rule for determining the amount of advantage to be given in the case of small horses. The most satisfactory way is to use a number of holes and simply shift the clevis until the small horse is able to carry the load the entire day without becoming more fatigued than the other horses. Some claim that the amount of lever arm or advantage given the small horse should be in proportion to the weight, but this is not always satisfactory because it is not taking into consideration the physical condition of the horses, which is a very important factor. However, to begin with, this method of adjustment does very well; other changes can be made as occasion requires.

SIRENS OF THE SANDS.

Gold Laden Professional Dancing Girls of North Africa.

The distinctive thing about the Ouled Nail, the professional dancing girl of north Africa, is her jewelry. She has so much of it, indeed, that there is no gold to be had in Algeria. Ask for napoleons instead of paper money at your bank in Biskra or Constantine and you will meet with a prompt "Impossible, m'sieur."

"But why is it impossible?" you naturally inquire.

"Because we have no gold on hand, m'sieur," is the polite response.

"Where is it then?" you ask, scenting a robbery or a defalcation.

"On the Ouled Nails, m'sieur," the cashier courteously replies.

And he speaks the truth. Every centime that a dancing girl can beg, borrow or earn goes toward the purchase of massive silver jewelry, ankiets, bracelets and the like, and this in turn is exchanged for gold pieces—whether French napoleons, British sovereigns or Turkish lirns she is not particular—which, linked together in trellised armor, clanking, clashing and shining, envelops her lithe young body from neck to hips. When her portable wealth has attained such dimensions it is usually the sign for the Ouled Nail to retire from business, going to her nomad husband with her dowry about her neck.—Metropolitan Magazine.

A Rebuke.

An anecdote about the late Rear Admiral Melville was told the other day at a Washington club.

"Melville one stormy morning at sea," said the narrator, "had occasion to rebuke a young officer for wearing soiled gloves.

"'But, sir,' the young officer remonstrated, 'the men have been so overworked in all this dirty weather one couldn't well ask them to wash gloves.'

"Melville took a pair of perfectly clean gloves from his pocket.

"'Here, wear these,' he said quietly. 'I washed these myself.'"—Washington Star.

PROFIT IN POTATOES.

Mr. E. A. Corey, One of Our Progressive Farmers and a Prominent Granger, Profits by His Experience in New Jersey and Reaps a Harvest in His Big Yield.

Mr. Edward A. Corey is the "potato king" of Kent county. For some years Mr. Corey and family lived in the great potatoe raising section of New Jersey, where every year the growers load hundreds of cars and make thousands of dollars in growing white potatoes. Taking advantage of the high price of potatoes and the scarcity of the vegetable on the market, Mr. Corey determined to plant a large acreage this spring and to take a risk with the season. He planted 30 acres, at a cost of some $1500, paying $500 for his seed potatoes and using 1500 pounds of the best fertilizer to the acre. The cost of the labor in preparing and planting the crop was considerable, much of the cutting being done by Mrs. Corey, who is just as good a farmer as is her husband. Had the season been bad and the crop a failure, Mr. Corey's loss would have been heavy. But the old saying, "no risk, no gain," proved true in Mr. Corey's case, and he has been the winner. He estimates his entire crop at 9,000 bushels, a yield of 300 bushels per acre. He dug them last week, using a potato digger just as is used in New Jersey, and ten men were employed to pick up the potatoes, all of which must be culled and the "selects" sent to market first. Mr. Corey was busy all last week loading cars at Worton Station. He sold his potatoes to New Jersey dealers—the selects at 70 cents per bushel, and his second at a little less. Mr. Corey will "clean up" about $4,000 on his venture. It is the largest crop of potatoes ever grown on a farm in this county, and marks the beginning of a new source of income to the farmers in this county. Mr. Corey will put the patch in scarlet clover, turn under the sod and plant a crop of late potatoes. Mr. Corey on several occasions has discussed potato culture at our county and subordinate grange meetings, and he has proven by actual experience that there is big money in the crop, even though there is considerable risk and expense. Mr. Corey, however, will net more money from his 30 acres in potatoes than he could have made in wheat or corn in any three or four years combined.

Petition on Crothers Estate.

Dr. A. C. Crothers, of Havre de Grace, brother of the late ex-Governor A. L. Crothers, has filed a petition in the Orphans' Court for Cecil county against Emerson R. and Omar D. Crothers, executors of the estate of Austin L. Crothers, asking for a full itemized statement of the assets belonging to the estate of the late Charles C. Crothers, of which estate the petitioner and Austin L. Crothers were joint executors. Dr. Crothers sets forth in his petition that his co-executor, Austin L. Crothers, possessed himself of the entire estate of his deceased brother, Charles C. Crothers; he further alleges that the administration of said estate was entirely confided to the said Austin L. Crothers, who was at that time a lawyer, practicing his profession in Cecil county, and residing in the town of Elkton, he further alleges that the said Austin L. Crothers in his life time gave to the petitioner little or no information concerning the estate of their deceased brother, Charles C. Crothers; that no inventory of said estate was ever returned to the Elkton Court, and there has never been any account filed or distribution made in said estate, so far as the records of that court disclose.

Under the terms of the will of Charles C. Crothers, above referred to, Austin L. Crothers was to receive the "Cruikshank property" in Elkton and two building lots in Wilmington; Alpheus R. Crothers a small farm in the Eighth district, and $600 in money; Dr. Augustus C. Crothers the sum of $3,500, Dr. Roman R. Crothers the sum of $500. After making several other small bequests all the rest of the estate, real and personal, was devised to Austin L. and Dr. Augustus C. Crothers, share and share alike.

Buy at Home Argument.

The retail merchants of Charleston, S. C., in waging an educational campaign, issued a buy at home propaganda as follows:

"I BUY AT HOME,"

Because my interets are here.

Because the community that is good enough for me to live in is good enough for me to buy in.

Because I believe in transacting business with my friends.

Because I want to see the goods.

Because my home dealer "carries" me when I run short.

Because every dollar I spend at home stays at home and works for the welfare of the country.

Because I earn my living here.

Because the man I buy from pays his part of the town, county and State taxes.

Because the man I buy from helps support my school, my church, my lodge, my home.

Because when ill luck, misfortune and bereavement come, the man I buy from is here with kindly greeting, his word of cheer and his pocketbook, if need be.

Here I live and here I buy.
