☞The oyster season opened last week, but the demand for oysters was so small that most of the tongers quit work and will wait for better prices. None of the Baltimore hotels except the Rennert and Belvedere will use oysters during the hot weather and the packing houses are so busy with tomatoes and corn that they can't take the oysters yet. Buy boats were paying 25 cents per bushel. The oysters are in good condition and prospects for a good season are bright when the weather settles up a bit.
