'We don't have any more integration problems here'

By MOSES NEWSON

"We don't have any more integration problems.

"No teachers or students have transferred because of inability to get along.

"The only statistics we gather by race any more are figures to be used in planning buildings."

That is the progress report on desegregation in the Baltimore public schools on the fourth anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court's historic decision against racial segregation in public schools.

It came this week from Dr. Houston Jackson, assistant superintendent of city schools.

IN A NUTSHELL

- In 1955 city had 4,601 colored pupils in 59 formerly all-white schools.
- By 1956 there were 9,242 colored pupils in 70 formerly white schools.
- Today there are 14,826 colored pupils in 73 mixed schools.

THE FOURTH year of the decision also marks the fourth year of desegregation in Baltimore schools.

Less than a month after the monumental edict was handed down on May 17, Baltimore's Board of School Commissioners voted (on June 4, 1954) to scrap its racial school system.

Although there was widespread resentment and considerable tension, Baltimore has made the transition with but one major outbreak.

This developed at Southern High School on Oct. 1 and again on Oct. 4, 1954.

Thousands of adults and children, some angry and some curious, staged a demonstration against 39 colored students attending Southern which had a total enrollment of 1,788.

Demonstrations were touched off at elementary schools in the area by the Southern outbreak but all fizzled out as officials stood firm.

* * *

BY THE fall of 1955 4,601 colored pupils were enrolled in 59 formerly all-white schools.

In 1956 there were 9,242 in 70 previously all-white schools.

When the school gongs sounded for the 1957-58 term, 14,826 colored students were enrolled in schools formerly for whites.

Quite significantly, teacher integration has accompanied student integration in Baltimore.

Dr. Jackson estimates that more than 600 colored teachers are now on integrated school staffs.

Baltimore has also discarded race labels of students and teachers and such race identification is no longer used in assignments to schools.

Dr. Jackson explains that statistics are used for building plans because predominately colored schools must be larger because their families tend to be larger.

* * *

DR. LORNE W. CLLATT, director of the board's research bureau, was able to supply certain figures on enrollment and the number of schools desegregated.

These figures show, first of all, that as of Oct. 31, 1957, there were 179,727 students enrolled in Baltimore schools, 87,312 white and 72,45 colored.

There are 102,935 elementary pupils, 51,958 white and 50,977 colored. By September 52 per cent of the elementary enrollment is expected to be colored.

This, officials say, is due to a heavier colored birthrate and the steady movement to outer areas by whites.

As of October 31 last year 62 of the 138 elementary schools were desegregated; 31 were all-white and 45 remained all-colored.

(Mixed elementary schools with junior high departments are included.)

The city's traditional residential pattern in housing results in the numbers of non-mixed schools.

There are eight mixed junior high schools; one all-white and one all-colored.

(These include schools with junior and senior high departments.)

In the senior high schools, two remain all colored of the 10 total.

Three of the vocational schools are desegregated, one remains all-white and three are for colored students.

Dr. Jackson said, that the only two secondary schools which do not have colored students are Patterson Park High and Hampstead Hill Junior.

However, both these have colored teachers, he added.

HOW SUCCESSFUL Baltimore has been in making the transition from segregated schools to desegregated schools can be seen in the new Edmondson High School.

Edmondson High, with Carroll Rankin as principal opened in September of 1957.

Students came from the feeder schools and districts. Teachers were assigned. Trains were arranged to accommodate students from the two races but not a ripple of trouble.

Of the 1,379 enrollment, approximately 25 per cent are colored. There are seven colored teachers on the staff of 67.

Students are assigned by classes to seats in the cafeteria and there is no friction apparent as they chat together during meals.

* * *

TWO TEACHERS, one colored and the other white, supervise a class of girls learning to swim in the school's pool.

A colored teacher conducts an English class in which all the students are white. The same situation obtains in a mathematics class.

In other class rooms students sit side - by - side in double seats, vying for the teacher's attention to answer a question.

Two boys sit in the library scribbling notes from a single reference book, forgetting the color difference as their heads almost touch.

A tall lanky basketball star getting a playful pick on the shoulder from a white chum who has to stretch his stride to keep up.

These are things a visitor can see any day at Edmondson High.

Or for that matter, at any one of nearly half the city's school.

It's a mighty encouraging and heart - warming thing to see on the fourth anniversary of the High Court's decision.

'No counties have said they won't'

"All the counties have taken affirmative action on the question of desegregation.

"No counties have said they won't integrate."

This was the picture painted of school desegregation progress in the 23 counties of Maryland on the fourth anniversary of the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954 decision.

The picture was painted by David W. Zimmerman, assistant superintendent of the state's public schools.

* * *

WHILE ALL of the counties are reportedly on the record as willing to go along with the desegregation decision, they have moved much slower than has Baltimore City.

Each county board of education has acted individually, approving the integration plan it says best fits the demands of its citizens.

Some have acted so that all grades were affected, some have started with a certain number of elementary grades while others have begun with some of the high school and junior high classes.

In addition, in most of the counties, colored children desiring to attend a white school must make a transfer application.

Of the 17,597 colored students now attending formerly all - white schools in the state, 14,826 of them are in Baltimore City.

Four years after the Supreme Court mandate, there are 2,221 colored students in formerly white schools in 13 of the 23 counties.

One county, Garrett, has no colored pupils.

The other nine counties have not actually practiced desegregation.

* * *

FOLLOWING is a breakdown, county by county, showing what the situation looked like by fall of 1957:

Allegany, 196 colored pupils in 15 schools formerly white; Anne Arundel, 173 in 7 schools; Baltimore County, 844 in 46 schools;

Calvert, NONE; Caroline NONE; Carroll, 10 in 1 school; Cecil, 16 in 3 school; Charles, 2 in 1 school;

Dorchester, NONE; Frederick, 161 in 4 schools; Harford, 51 in 7 schools; Howard, 7 in 1 school; Kent, NONE; Montgomery, 936 in 47 schools; Prince Georges 34 in 1 schools; Queen Anne's, NONE; St. Mary's, NONE; Somerset, NONE;

Talbot, 17 in 3 schools; Washington, 159 in 12 schools; Wicomico, NONE; Worchester, NONE.

* * *

ALTHOUGH the rural counties have moved much slower than Baltimore, the 2,221 colored children now in county desegregation schools is more than twice the 991 who attended mixed classes in 1955.

The NAACP has filed suits in three counties on the desegregation issue.

These were in Harford and St. Mary's where the delayed desegregation plans were attacked and in Charles County where a pupil is seeking the privilege of using the bus which haols his white school mates.

Down in Howard County, a group of prominent citizens went to court seeking to have the county board of education's desegregation plan overruled but they lost.

An ironic situation exists in some counties, such as St. Mary's, where no colored students are enrolled despite the desegregation policy.

Four pupils were approved for admission to all - white schools but none showed up. They would have had to enroll in grades one - six.

* * *

THIS FALL St. Mary's opens its doors in white schools to colored pupils through the 12th grade.

This will include the grade level of one of two students currently plaintiffs in a suit to enroll in a white school in the county.

While the sledding has been rough, there is no palpable feeling about the future in the counties as the High Court decision's fourth anniversary is observed.

Wife dies as she prepares for vacation trip

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Redie of the 3300 block Clifton Ave. were putting packages in their car Wednesday night in preparation for a vacation trip when the wife slumped on the bathroom floor, Mr. Redie told police.

Thirty minutes later at 8:45 p.m. she was pronounced dead at Lutheran Hospital.

Mr. Redie told police his wife has been under treatment for a high blood pressure condition.

Fellowship won

Dr. Melvin Humphrey, associate professor of economics at Morgan State College, has been awarded a fellowship by the Case Institute of Technology to attend the 1958 Economics in Action program.

The program is being sponsored by leading firms of the Cleveland area, and will be held in this city for four weeks beginning June 14.

Dr. Humphrey holds the Ph.D. degree in business from the University of Illinois. He joined the Morgan faculty in 1957.

Mrs. Daisy Phillips

Mrs. Daisy Phillips, 72, 1009 Providence St., is scheduled to be buried today after services at Metropolitan Methodist Church where she had been a member for 25 years.

Mrs. Phillips died Monday at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

A native Baltimorean, Mrs. Phillips was married to William E. Phillips, her only survivor.

At the church, Mrs. Phillips was a member of the Flower Circle, the choir and the Women's Society of Christian Service.

Scheduled to officiate at the services are the Rev. Frank Williams, pastor of Metropolitan, and the Rev. C. Y. Trigg.

Says mate went to get food and never returned

Her husband, Herman Boone, went out to get food for breakfast nearly four years ago and has never returned, Mrs. Marie Boone testified last week.

Adding that she saw him a month after he left in August, 1954 and that he ran from her, the wife saying, "He really ducked me!"

The 37-year-old mother of seven asked for and obtained custody of all of their children: Mr. Boone, a worker at Bethlehem Steel Co., was ordered to pay her $30 per week for support of six of the children. The oldest, a son, 19, is employed.

A DIVORCE also went to Mrs. Janie Johnson of 2614 W. Lafayette Ave. from Gilbert John Johnson.

Mrs. Johnson said that she and Mr. Johnson were married on August 4, 1951 in Charlottesville, Va.

They separated on January 14, 1956 according to testimony.

"We had an argument and he packed up and moved," the wife said.

Franklin Pressey

Franklin H. Pressey of 319 W. Pembrooke Ave., Hampton, Va., died Tuesday in Johns Hopkins Hospital, after a short illness.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth N. Pressey; four sons, Warren and Isaiah Pressey of Baltimore, Winton Pressey of New York City and James Pressey of Hampton; a daughter, Mrs. Mabel Jackson of Hampton, four grandchildren, an aunt, an uncle, a brother, John T. Taylor of Baltimore; two sisters, Mrs. Laurietta Dean and Mrs. Reba Taylor of Baltimore; stepfather John T. Taylor Sr. of Baltimore.

Services were held Saturday in Hampton. Mr. Pressey attended the public schools of Baltimore.

Teachers need some knowledge gaps filled

"Trying to grow up and maintain some sort of equilibrium in an anxious age is one of the important problems of this day."

A group of Maryland educators heard this statement on Wednesday from Dr. William E. Vickery of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Dr. Vickery spoke at an education luncheon at the Sheraton - Belvedere Hotel which was attended by about 20 educators.

Dr. Harry Bard, chairman of the education committee of the Maryland NCCJ, presided.

Dr. Vickery said he thought some "gaps in knowledge" were not being filled for prospective teachers.

He said he felt prospective teachers should know more about the social structure of the area where they teach and be able to pay "a little more attention to the child's growth and behavior as affected by the culture in which they are reared."
