Park Board backs down

Faced with an NAACP suit in United States District Court contending that its proposed sale of Harlem Park was unlawful, the Park Board quietly rescinded its action last week.

The board said its belated action was based on an opinion issued by the city solicitor to the effect that no such sale could be made because the property had been deeded to the city by one Dr. Edmonds and a city ordinance agreeing to accept the property to be used as a public square forever.

The first question we want to ask is what kind of a Park Board do we have that would rush into a sale of a city public square without asking the city solicitor could it lawfully dispose of public property?

• • •

SOMETIME AGO, they attempted to sell an East Baltimore square and found that it also had been given to the city with the clear understanding that it would never be diverted to any other use except that of a park site.

There must be any number of other similar plots of property bequeathed to the city for public use in perpetuity and the Park Board may not sell them under any circumstances for any other purposes.

Members of the Park Board who know their jobs should have always before them a list of gift property and the purposes for which they have been dedicated and check that list before they authorize any sales.

The act of this Park Board in selling Harlem Square must have been in ignorance of that restriction.

• • •

WE CAN'T conceive of the board selling any property that it knew it was holding only as a public trust.

Let 'em eat cake

Elsewhere in this edition is a story which reveals that none of Maryland's counties have taken advantage of the federal surplus food program which would make available to needy families free foodstuffs.

Baltimore City, on the other hand, is making this food available to over 11,000 persons under its program supervised by the Department of Public Welfare.

The counties, the survey discloses, have generally taken a dim view of the whole program. County officials contend the cost of distributing the free food to needy countians negates the program.

A "let 'em eat cake" attitude seems to prevail in Howard County on this matter.

Howard Norman Moxley, Howard county manager: "We feel that every one ought to be able to stand on their feet and take care of themselves.

"I don't think anybody should be given food if they can work. We don't believe in doles."

When asked about the advisability of providing the food-stuff to Howard countians unable to work, Mr. Moxley retorted:

"There are a lot of people who won't work when they are able and I'd rather see them starve to death. We wouldn't even think about the program."

We certainly beg to differ with Mr. Moxley's adamant position.

We also feel the counties should take a long second look at the surplus food program in view of the success it is having in Baltimore City.

Garbage control

Unless your garbage can is metal and has a proper lid you are in violation of a city health ordinance which also serves as a rat control and nuisance abatement device.

In an effort to tighten controls on this measure Dr. Huntington Williams, commissioner of health, Police Commissioner James M. Hepbron, and Joseph H. McCarthy, city sanitary engineer, met and agreed on a coordinated garbage regulation enforcement program.

The program has the approval of Housing Court Magistrate Marshall A. Levin, whose job it is to pass judgment on those accused of violating the measure.

Dr. Williams has correctly pointed out that stricter enforcement of the ordinance would not only be in the interest of better health but would also clear Baltimore streets of such unsightly things as paper bags and cardboard containers.

In order to awaken the public to its responsibility in the matter the officials charged with enforcing the ordinance have agreed on a program of education, with stricter action to follow if persuasion fails.

If we are to dispose of our garbage with the least hazard to health or further rat infestation each individual should do his part in obeying this regulation.

A sound decision

The decision of the New Jersey Supreme Court that public school buses may be utilized to transport parochial school pupils is a good thing.

The opinion should be of special significance to Baltimore.

If the Catholic Church and Jewish synagogues did not provide schools for their own children, the Baltimore school board would have to provide school facilities for at least 35,000 additional children.

LATINS AND POLITICS

One of the compensations of growing older is that we are able to dip into the reservoir of our experiences, scoop up the water of memory, wash off the ugly happenings of the present and bring them into sharper focus.

This, I was able to do in two instances as history unfolded this week. By dredging up the past, I was better able to understand the happenings in both South America and in France, which held the attention of the headline writers in the far flung capitals of the world.

One was the attack upon Vice President Nixon on his good will tour of South America and the other was the threat of civil war in France.

One little word contained in the news accounts of the attack on the Vice President rang a bell with me and unlocked in a single piece both Paris and Caracas. That word was spit.

The story told how the crowds swarmed around the Nixon car, yelling, throwing stones and covering the vehicle with spit and I recalled that this was a typical demonstration of Latin American With them politics and spit go hand in hand.

• • •

I RECALLED a day in Paris many years ago when I was rubber-necking around the famous landmarks, very thrilled, but very much alone.

I was strolling along the Champs — Elysees ogling the Mademoiselles, both individually and those being convoyed by Senglanee and Parisian men of war when I recognized the first familiar face I had seen in weeks.

It framed the sultry smile and flashing eyes of a pert little Mexican girl whom I had met aboard ship during the crossing.

I had left the liner somewhere off the cliffs of Dover and gone by tender to London, while she continued on to L.Havre.

She seemed as delighted as I was to meet an old friend, because friendships flourish quickly on shipboard and usually die as suddenly. But here we were two lonely strangers in a sea of Frenchmen finding a haven of refuge in our mutual isolation.

• • •

I WAS more interested in strolling the boulevards, watching the people, drinking in the sidewalk cafes, testing the famed cuisine and trying to master the art of eating crepe suzettes. I was intrigued by the outdoor art exhibits which popped up intermittently along the Seine. I loved the constant babble, horn blowing and ruckus the city which the excitable French could convert the simplest occurrence like a minor traffic jam into an international crisis.

But Lolita (aren't all Mexican girls named Lolita?) seemed possessed with but one desire. She wanted to visit the Cathedral of Notre Dame.

This sudden passion took me by surprise. All the way over on the ship, she had spoken bitterly of the corruption of the Catholic church which she blamed for the poverty of her people in Mexico. Her conversation was pregnant with ominous threats of the overthrow of the capitol bosses, the liquidation of the priesthood and the ascendency of the proletariat.

• • •

SHE ENGAGED me in intellectual combat over the issue of whether or not Langston Hughes was truly a people's poet or a capitalistic tool exploiting the suffering of his race for personal gain. I did not know because she knew more about Langston's poems and political philosophy than I did.

In fact, she knew a lot more about a lot of colored people than I did. She knew those who should be liquidated and those who should be spared. The first list was the longest.

She was very intense, sometimes terrifying in her sincerity about liberating life downtrodden masses, but because she was also very pretty everything she said sounded perfectly all right with me.

WE FINALLY reached the Cathedral and I was temporarily distracted by a furtive gentleman who called me aside and offered to sell me some genuine French postcards. The deal consummated, he vanished into the shadows and I peeked in the package. They were genuine French postcards — pictures of the Eiffel Tower, the Arc de Triumph etc. The swindle was worth it. Lolita forgot she was saving the world and laughed and laughed and laughed.

But inside she was serious again. We purchased long slim candles from one of the nuns and went tiptoeing along the darkened rotunda, past the statues and monuments to the great princess of the church.

From her increasing excitement as she led me from place to place like a bloodhound following a scent I became aware that Lolita was searching for one individual.

"Here he is," she whispered, stopping short and reading the inscription on the marble life-size likeness of a figure chiseled in repose of death, his face upturned, his hands clasped across his breast. "I have come all the way across the ocean just to see this sight," she said, signaling me to lift her up over the iron balustrade that she could get a better view—not an unpleasant task.

• • •

BUT I was wholly unprepared for what happened. Leaning far over the grating she watched the nun slip silently into the shadows and then spit in the figure's face.

"That man," she said, "was once the cardinal of Mexico and he helped to enslave my people. I always swore that I would spit upon him if I ever came to Paris."

Out in the sunlight again she was gay and carefree, her religious fervor expended in the accomplishment of this holy mission. That's how I learned about Latins, politics and spit.

Wonderful coverage

Dear AFRO:

I wish to thank you on behalf of the "Ladies Guild of Provident Hospital" for the wonderful coverage you gave our Eleventh Annual Tea April 27th in your May 3rd issue.

I would like for your photographer Mr. Phillips, your columnists Mrs. B. M. Phillips and Mrs. Lola Jones Garrett to know just how much such publicity means to our organization, and how much we appreciate it.

Mrs. VIRGINIA M. CHAMP, President

Appreciation

Dear AFRO:

We, at the Avenue Theatre, certainly appreciate your good wishes and magnificent flowers which arrived the day we opened our doors. It lent just the right touch of color to an auspicious occasion.

It is a pleasure to know that you wish us well and we hope our relationship will continue on the same plane of friendship we have always mutually enjoyed.

Giants among us

Dear AFRO:

Every race and nation creates, along with its millions of pigmies, a few whom history will record as moral and intellectual giants.

It is to the credit or discredit of every people that they recognize the giants who walk among them.

In colored America, two such men, risen to giants, are living out their twilight years among us. Men who have stubbornly stood by their principles as they saw them and fought for their people and gave fully of themselves for the good fight for freedom.

When, as time passes they leave us—as all men must—they will leave behind them a path made easier for us to walk.

A path in deeds and words—written and spoken, work and thoughts, thoughts and actions—which make us better today for their having been; but which made life at times severely difficult to these great men, difficult, because they challenged the special privileges of the powerful few.

When these men do pass from the scene we will in future years erect monuments to their memory.

Let us acknowledge our giants of today today. Let us not crucify them on crosses of apathy because we fear to share the burdens of giants, and tomorrow erect statues to them.

It's been a long time since Paul Robeson sang in Baltimore. It's been a long time—too long a time—since W. E. B. DuBois shared his thoughts with us.

Our marble statues of tomorrow will bring no happiness to these men after they are gone. They will only serve to soothe our own troubled conscience.

By inviting these men to Baltimore we will be acknowledging that they have much to offer us. We would do honor to ourselves for being able to recognize the giants among us and by thus doing, we raise ourselves from the stature of pigmies.

Teenage guidance

Dear AFRO:

Much distress has been caused recently by the alarming reports of hoodlumism, gang-wars and crime among teenagers in New York and other large cities.

Washington was rudely aroused to the seriousness of this problem by the reports of "a rumble" in the nation's Capital between teenage gangs recently, that resulted in the gunshot wounding of one of the boys.

The pictured assortment of lethal weapons that were confiscated, left no doubt as to the gravity of the matter. That there is a need of immediate consideration of juvenile delinquency on a far reaching scale is clear.

It is sincerely hoped that every parent and agency that is in contact with boys and girls will examine, evaluate and strengthen their program, that this evil may be prevented and eliminated.

As an initial consideration, and the only happy one in this picture, it is well for parents of young children, and of well behaved youngsters, to keep in mind the fact that juvenile delinquency is not necessary.

God's advice concerning the care of children is true today as of old: Proverbs 22:6 "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Of course, such training requires much parental sacrifice of time and personal advantage. It may require a mother to sacrifice the opportunity to work away from home, so that proper food, clothing, companionship and interest may be provided her children at all times in their own home.

Most of the juvenile delinquents are just overgrown hun-

Sometimes you wonder why men went to all the trouble to invent the telephone, telegraph, radio and other methods of communication when the greatest apparatus for the dispensing of information and misinformation has been here all the time—the human mouth.

Just in case a conversation I just happened to mention I was thinking about buying a new car.

So help me Hannah, that's all I said . . . Just thinking.

Now the process of thinking about buying a new car might last for a couple of years before a fellow makes a move.

But less than 24 hours after I made my unfortunate remark, a breathless salesman calls me up to tell me that he heard I had decided to buy a new car and he was going all out to see that I got the best deal possible.

I thought that was pretty darn decent of him, us being strangers and all, but I had to break the sad news to him.

"There are a lot of things I am in the market for, but right now a new car isn't in the bunch."

"If you have a second hand horse or saddle broken camel for sale we can talk business, but otherwise you my friend are wasting your time," I told him.

He got the message okay but shortly after he said adieu another salesman called me and we went around the May Pole again.

These falls kept up all day and by nightfall I had said no more times than a Russian delegate to the U.N.

And to think that my new found popularity all stemmed from a chance remark I happened to make.

Which should prove that nothing beats a big mouth for the transmittal of news.

Incidentally, I've still got my old car, which proves I've got will power.

THE PROGRAM, under which the various departments of public welfare are handing out free food to relief clients, with said food coming from the federal government, has inspired one wit to dub the places where such food is handed out as "like's Snack Shop."

Other reports have been lavish in the praise of Duke Ellington's concert on Sunday night at Pole's.

However, there was one sour note, thought fortunately it did not come from the 'Ellington principles as they saw them and fought for their people and gave fully of themselves for the good fight for freedom.

When, as time passes they leave us—as all men must—they will leave behind them a path made easier for us to walk.

A path in deeds and words—written and spoken, work and thoughts, thoughts and actions—which make us better today for their having been; but which made life at times severely difficult to these great men, difficult, because they challenged the special privileges of the powerful few.

People, places and things...

A meeting of the testimonial committee for Mrs. Mattie White Ashton was held Thursday night at home of Miss Charlotte Williams.

It's set for Thursday, June 26. Subscriptions will be $2.50. It will be at St. Mary's Church, Orchard St. near Madison Ave.

Interested persons may contact Mrs. Marita Stokes and Mrs. Barbara Bennett at Booker T. Washington Junior High School.

Mrs. Gertrude Morris, treasurer, will also have tickets at 2817 Woodbrook Ave.

Other committee members are Mrs. Myrtle Cole, Mrs. Naomi Sullivan, Mrs. Elizabeth Edmonds and Mrs. Daisy Rawlings.

Deadline for subscriptions is June 16.

BE CLEVER, be smart, don't decide the new chemise look is not for you — just find the kind that suits you. There is a variation for everybody, . . . you'll be surprised at how well you look, particularly if you wear the correct style for your figure and the proper foundation garment.

Speaker of these words on Saturday afternoon was Mrs. Victorine Adams, owner of the Charm Centre.

The occasion was a spring fashion show held at the Casino. To prove her conclusions, Mrs. Adams presented a lovely group of models to show off the latest in styles, which are available at the Charm Centre.

The models were Mrs. Marian Selby, Mrs. Estelle Hill Jacobs, Mrs. Loretta Bryant, Mrs. Ofelia Bullock and Mrs. Cynthia Cannady.

AN OBSERVANT guest learned that there are pretty and attractive cottons and nylons and linens in all price ranges. And, the clever of heart play clothes suitable for many occasions.

A Saturday's guests oohed and aahed about the tomato red cotton three - way dress priced at $19.99 which could be a chemise, a sun suit and a town dress just by moving the attached scarf around.

And, to prove that price is not important, but the style—a blue chemise sailor dress in cotton with white collar trimmed in red with the color scheme repeated on the pocket for just $10.99.

And, there is a belt provided so you can make an ordinary dress out of it if the chemise style is not to your liking.

• • •

THE CHEMISE of the chemise — the crepe and nylon "spaghetti dress" in crepe and nylon black. Long and slim in the body, the gown has two tiers at the knee — they are called 'rolls of spaghetti.'

Other outstanding numbers: pale, pale blue lace over sheath with organdy band at bottom and an organdy back panel—just the things for dancing and cocktails — also $32.50.

And, in a similar vein and at the same price, a very attractive black organdy over taffeta. Also, a white embroidered 'tear dress' embroidered with balloon effect and camisole top, all embroidered, in grey.

• • •

AND, JUST in case you care — the shirtwaist dresses are being revised this year. They have the slim skirt, rounded collars and retail for just $14.95 — just the thing for classroom or work on hot days.

Of course, there were many others. The Saturday crowd also had a look see at the newest in hat styles —

Hottest thing in hats — the "curbings," and the "whimsies," — both small numbers. The latter is just a bunch of flowers with veiling. The 'curbing' resembles the hair and come in many colors. And guess what, this new headgear is about $10!

Special guests at the fashion show; members of the Wives Club who were hosted by Lil Ross and Verniece Reynolds.

Later, the girls went on to Verniece's where they were treated to a special Chinese dish of shrimp and rice and a tasty fresh fruit dessert.

Door prizes at the fashion show went to Mrs. Margaret Holiday, Mrs. Timothy Henson and Mrs. Elizabeth White.

More people and things...

Their friends are hoping that the Algernon Prestwidges (Gladys) will kiss and make up. They're the parents of the television quiz winner, lovely Barbara Prestwidge.

The John Riches 3rd (Jayne Thomas) are parents of a son, John Rich 4th, born last Sunday in Washington, baby weighed 7 pounds, 14 ounces. He is their first child.

And, it makes three grandchildren for the John Rich Jrs. (Ethel). Daughter — Mrs. Herbert Watts — has two — Heber Jr. and Gloria.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry West (Evelyn) expect their second image in August.

The Hiram Butlers (Bea) are looking for a few houses—their pretty Longwood St. home is just too big for the two of them.

Catching up with old friends: Renewed acquaintance this week with Mr. and Mrs. T. Bernard Nelson Sr. (Phoebe) — he's a teacher of Latin, French and Spanish at Douglass High School.

When I was in Douglass, he taught us French and Latin. The Spanish has been added in recent years because of the many opportunities for persons familiar with Spanish.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson who observed their 27th wedding anniversary on May 9, now have another May bride in their family.

Their son, Thomas Jr. was married on Sunday at St. Katherine PE Church to Miss Elizabeth Miller. Young Nelson is an electrician and she's a clerk.

They are at home at 1314 Poplar Grove St., where they will hold a wedding reception on Saturday evening.

By the way, Mr. Nelson Sr., was in Boston last month to bury his mother. Mrs. Rosa Nelson, who died there at the age of 88.

Also met this week: James Nesbitt, 806 W. Saratoga St., Yellow Cab driver who carted me to my voting place minutes before the polls closed on Tuesday.

He has been driving cabs for seven years. Did he manage to vote on Tuesday: "Indeed I did. I promised myself when I was growing up, there were two things I wanted my father 2nd AC Rgt., APO 114, New York to help me do — become a Mason and register to vote.

"I did both and I hope to see my children do the same thing," he said.

Mr. Nesbitt is a member of King David Lodge No. 5, F and AM Masons. He is married — his wife is named Mildred. They have four children and two grandchildren.

• • •

Another pleasant person met this week on an early morning train to Philadelphia where I've been all this week: Mrs. Sadie Johnson, Elkton, Md. beautician and caterer.

Believe it or not she was on her way to Philly to visit her hairdresser — proof that hairdressers don't do their own hair!!

Mrs. Johnson is the wife of Harry Johnson, Pennsylvania Railroad locomotive preparer man. She has a daughter by a previous marriage Miss Dorothy Jean Milburn, a Washington teacher.

Speaking of Elkton, am reminded that a Sunday evening fire there damaged the summer home of Mrs. Aileen Lang.

She and her hubby were not there at the time of the blaze — in fact Mr. Lang had left shortly before the blaze broke out.

Seat companion in the diner on the train to Philly: Dr. Matthew Mitchell, Washington dentist (Howard U.—class of 1945)—who revealed that he commutes to Philly each week to continue graduate work in dentistry.

Word from Englewood, N.J., about former Baltimorean Helen Carper Faithful — whom friends report is happy there in a new split - level home she and her hubby recently occupied.

St. James PE Church members who went up to New York last week to see Father and Mrs. Cedric E. Mills off for Europe: — Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Monroe, Mrs. L. B. Higgin, Mrs. Charles R. Campbell, Mrs. Leonard Underwood.

Philadelphia's new Sheraton Hotel is truly a dream. It has self service elevators with music piped in the ceiling.

Watched one hotel guest this week walk in and say to another, "Quiet. Yes, please," not knowing the elevator needed no operator. The guest, of course, ignored the command!

Real hush — the deep carpets throughout — on the tenth floor they are pink. And the rooms have air condition units, television, modernistic furniture — beds at night become sofas in the day and glass-enclosed tubs and showers — and everything to make you feel comfy.

Mrs. Grace Watts Lee, 1406 Myrtle Ave., will be the first to graduate from Towson State Teachers' College on June 8.

She has already passed the National Teachers' exam and been assigned to teach fifth grade at School No. 61.

Word from Spt. and Mrs. W. B. Weems, Hdqts. Co., 3rd Bn., 2nd AC Rgt., APO 114, New York

Mrs. Weems (Alease) writes that she and her family are "having a wonderful time in Germany and are looking forward to a trip to the Brussells World's Fair after school closes June 7."

She would like members of St. James Methodist Church to know that she was elected general superintendent of the Sunday School in Amberg, Germany, where "we have every denomination and many races in attendance." The Weems's home address: 317 E. 23rd St., Baltimore.

Along the way

By STEVE DUNCAN

The city fathers have turned thumbs down on a juvenile curfew proposal introduced by City Councilman Walter T. Dixon for the purpose of possibly curbing some of Baltimore's nocturnal acts of delinquency.

The ordinance as visualized by Mr. Dixon would have required that youngsters 17 years old and under be off the streets by the witching hour unless they had legitimate reasons for being out at midnight.

Action by the city fathers in curbing this proposed curb has given juveniles the assurance that they can rock around the clock without fear of running afoul of the law between the hours of midnight and sunup.

• • •

TO WHAT extent would a juvenile curfew law be effective in cutting down on the number of acts of juvenile delinquency in Baltimore?

There can be no denying that too many crimes are committed by youngsters here during night hours when they should be home in bed.

And no less an authority than FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover has sounded alarm at the high percentage of major crimes by hoodlums under 18 during 1957.

• • •

ON THE other hand, however, the number of youthful offenders represent such a small percentage of the total teenage population here that it would seem a sad rule to penalize the 99 to get at the one.

I'm doubtful that a curfew law is the answer to misdemeanors and felons committed
