GIFTS OF THE VIKING.

How Norse Sea Kings Enriched Our Nautical Vocabulary.

When we say a ship is bound for a certain port or homeward bound, we are using, not the past participle, as we might think, of the English verb to bind, but of a Scandinavian word meaning to prepare, to get ready—a word which in the form of "boun" still lives on in northern dialects.

"Billow" is probably a Scandinavian word which survived in one of the northern or eastern dialects, which still preserve so many Danish words. It made its way into southern English in the sixteenth century and was given a literary standing by its use by Spenser and Shakespeare.

"Wake" for the track of a ship is another Scandinavian word preserved in dialect. Its original meaning, as Professor Skeat tells us, was that of an opening in the ice, especially the passage cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea, and then, from being applied to the smooth watery track left by the ship after its passage through the ice, it came to be used when there was no ice at all. This useful word is one of the nautical terms which the French have borrowed from the English, although it is not easy to recognize it at first in its French form of ouaiche, and it is still used on the Norfolk broads with its original meaning of an open place in the ice.—English Review.

WHIRL OF THE WORLD.

What Would Happen if We Crashed Into Another World.

We are spinning through space at the rate of more than a thousand miles a minute. What would happen were we to meet another world moving at the same speed?

In the first place, the heat generated by the shock would be so great that both worlds would be transformed into gigantic balls of vapor many times the size of the earth today. This, however, might not happen if the inside of the earth is composed of solider and colder matter than scientists believe it to be.

Although there is small chance of any such aerial collision taking place, scientists have already calculated the probable results fairly accurately. One has expressed the amount of heat that would be generated in this way. It would be sufficient, he says, to melt, boil and completely vaporize a mass of ice 700 times the bulk of both the colliding worlds—an ice planet 150,000 miles in diameter.

Scientists have often considered the possibility that the end of the earth would come about in this way.

Certain it is that planets as great as the earth have been destroyed by coming into collision with other huge bodies.—New York Press.

Colonial Fireplaces.

The early American fireplace was merely a cheap provincial copy of English models of the same period. The application of the word "colonial" to pre-Revolution architecture and decoration has created a vague impression that there existed at that time an American architectural style. As a matter of fact, "colonial" architecture is simply a modest copy of Georgian models, and "colonial" mantelpieces were either imported from England by those who could afford it or were reproduced in wood from current English designs. Wooden mantels were indeed, not unknown in England, where the use of a wooden architrave led to the practice of facing the fireplace with Dutch tiles, but wood was used in England and America only from motives of cheapness, and the architrave was set back from the opening only because it was unsafe to put an inflammable material so near the fire.—Exchange.

Dreams.

Dreams are excursions into the limbo of things, a semideliverance from human prison. The man who dreams is but the locale of various phenomena of which he is the spectator in spite of himself. He is passive and impersonal; he is the plaything of unknown vibrations and invisible sprites.

The man who should never issue from the stage of dream would have never attained humanity, properly so called, but the man who had never dreamed would only know the mind in its completed or manufactured state and would not be able to understand the genesis of personality. He would be like a crystal incapable of guessing what crystallization means.—New Orleans States.

Knew Her Business.

A weather beaten woman, dressed in new and stylish clothing, was marching up the street one Sunday morning when down came a sudden shower. The woman had no umbrella, but quick as a flash she caught up her dress skirt and threw it over her hat.

"You'll get your ankles all wet, Maria," said her husband, who was coming along in the rear.

"Oh, never mind the ankles," called out the woman as she hurried along. "I've had them wet the last sixty years and I only got the hat yesterday."—Harper's Bazar.
