Unique Music Identifies Slam Stewart and Group

Slam Stewart, Currently appearing at the Comedy Club with his combo, is one of the few musicians of the past decade who brought something original to the jazz field.

Slam's quincy string-and-sing work makes him an outstanding musician and personality.

Hailing from Englewood, N.J., he came to the attention of swing fanciers when he and his former partner, Slim Gaillard, wrote "Flat Foot Floogie."

Began as Violin Player

He began as a violin player but switched to the bull fiddle because he found that there wasn't much call for a violinist of his race.

He once was a member of the Benny Goodman band. While with Benny, he recorded his famous "Gotta Be This or That."

His method of bowing the bass while humming along with it in perfect pitch is unique musicianship.

He got the novel idea after watching a concert violinist sing while practicing a difficult passage from the classics.

He formerly attended the Boston Conservatory of Music.

THE SLEEPING CITY' PLAYING AT HARLEM

"The Sleeping City," a currently playing the Harlem, combines the stark realism of authentic New York backgrounds with a fast original plot that unfolds on the screen with the punch of a seven paper headline.

Richard Conte and Coleen Gray are starred in the picture which was filmed in its entirety in New York.

It tells the story of a member of a detective squad who is injured in a hospital in an effort to run down a perplexing murder case. His adventures make a suspenseful story.

BLAZING ACTION SEEN IN 'DALTON' DRAMA

The Daltons gang, last great outlaw band of the old west, comes spectacularly to life in "When the Daltons Rode," now sharing the bill with "Gypsy Wildcat" at the New Albert.

The story, starring Randolph Scott and Brod Crawford, with Kay Francis in her first outdoor role, reaches a climax with the historic raid on Coffeyville, Kan., in 1892, when the gang was destroyed while staging the old West's only double bank robbery.
