

Rayo The Reliable Household Lantern

There is always need for a good lantern around the home—in the yard, in the cellar, in the attic—wherever a lamp is inconvenient or unsafe.

The RAYO is ideal for home use. It gives a clear, bright light—like sunlight on tap. It is strong, durable, compact, handy. Doesn't leak. Doesn't smoke. Easy to light and rewick. Will last for years. Ask for the RAYO.

Wasted Manure is Money Thrown Away

No Farm Product Of Equal Value Is So Poorly Cared For.

W. E. HANGER.
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

Of all fertilizers used for crops, good stable manure is the most desirable since it furnishes plant food and puts "life" or humus into the soil. Of course, it is not possible for the average farmer to cover a great deal of his land, but he can at least, take care of what he has. Fresh manure loses in decay from 20 to 70 per cent. of its original weight. An 80-ton heap of cow manure for one year lost 66 per cent. of its dry substance. The manure from the stock on a 160-acre farm was found to be worth $342, one-half of which is lost on the average farm before the manure is applied. The $171 lost would easily have paid for the fertilizer needed on a 40-acre wheat field on that farm, yet the owner complains of the little amount of manure he can make.

In saving our manure from loss, we should use enough bedding or litter in the stable to absorb and save all the liquid parts. The loss due to heating can be checked by mixing horse manure with the cooler cow manure, by making the pile as solid as possible; and by moistening it so as to drive out the air and lower the temperature. Plaster, kainit, or phosphate rock sprinkled on the fresh manure will preserve it and prevent loss. Losses from washing or leaching by rains may be avoided by having the piles of manure under cover, or better still, hauling it directly to the field and spreading it as soon as produced.

HANDLING POTATOES RIGHT A PAYING PROPOSITION

Little Trouble Required To Make Potatoes Which Have Become Sweet Fit To Eat.

The Maryland Experiment Station in its Bulletin No. 167 finds that potatoes for eating purposes keep best at a temperature of from 38° to 42°. They keep best in a well-ventilated cellar or vault that is moderately dry. They should not be kept in large heaps or bins since this will cause them to heat and spoil. Heating is due to poor ventilation and rapid respiration of the potatoes. Respiration is the change that is constantly going on in stored potatoes. It changes the starch and sugar in potatoes into carbon dioxide gas and water. When the temperature falls below 38° in the storage room, starch changes to sugar very rapidly, the change being the most rapid at from 29° to 32°.

The changing of the starch in the potato to sugar sweetens it so that it is unfit for cooking purposes. If potatoes, which have become sweet through long exposure to low temperatures, are brought into a room of 70° to 75° for a week, about four-fifths of the sugar will be changed back into starch, the remaining fifth being lost through respiration. A longer exposure of three to four weeks in the cellar or vault after the temperature has risen to 45° or 50° will remove most of the sugar and make the potato fit for use.

GREEN FEED MAKES YOUR HENS LAY

Wheat Bran Proves a Good Substitute When Greens Get Short.

ROY H. WAITE.
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

If you are going to begin hatching early, you should see that your breeding birds have plenty of green food. Green feed gives them the necessary amount of roughage to balance the grain and meat you are giving them. It will keep them healthy and in good breeding condition. If they have plenty of green feed, you will have good hatches and strong chickens. You probably have plenty of green feed on hand just now,—turnips, cabbages, clover chaff. Very soon the rye or wheat or vetch you seeded in your runs last fall will be ready for them to pick at on sunny days. If you have a small hot bed, and wish to take the trouble, start sprouting oats in it. A one-sash bed will keep a hundred hens in green feed for some time, and is much cheaper than any "sprouter" you can buy.

Even if you cannot get a good supply of green feed, you need not worry. The Maryland Experiment Station has found that wheat bran will go a long way toward taking the place of green feed. Hens fed on bran kept every bit of green stuff in their runs eaten up, but hens fed bran in a self-feeding hopper ate only a part of the greens in their runs and let the rest grow. This shows that bran, to a considerable extent, can take the place of green feed or rather that bran-fed hens may get but little green feed and yet do well.

Other Crops Can Be Developed Proportionally.

Maryland's soil, climate and location are exceptionally well fitted for growing food for man. She has ten million consumers in the cities and towns located at her doors.

Ingenuous.

Little Caillou, a French boy, was allowed to take luncheon with his mother and her guests on condition that he ate only that which was offered him, making no comment. By and by, however, when dessert was on the table, Caillou could not resist a certain temptation.

"Please, mamma, may I have a sardine?"

"No, my son; you know very well that you may not have a sardine, that such things are not allowed you. And I thought you promised me not to ask for anything special to eat."

"Oh, I don't want to eat it," was the little boy's ingenuous and astonishing answer. "I just want to put it in my glass of water and see it float."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Pretty Dead.

A native of a boom town who had moved away happened on one of his old neighbors who still lived there and asked him about the town.

"Oh, it's awful," replied the unfortunate neighbor. "Deadest place you ever saw. Say, you know Jones, don't you? Well, he dropped dead in front of the postoffice Sunday, and they didn't find the body till Thursday."—Everybody's.

Importance of Healthy Kidneys.

Chestertown Readers Should Learn to Keep the Kidneys Well.

The kidneys have a big work to do. All the blood in the body is coursing through the kidneys constantly to be freed of poisonous matter. It is a heavy enough task when the kidneys are well, but a cold, chill, fever or some thoughtless exposure is likely to irritate, inflame, and congest the kidneys and interrupt the purifying work.

Then the aching frequently begins and is often accompanied by some irregularity of the urine—too frequent passages, sediment or retention. Thousands testify to the wonderful merit of Doan's Kidney Pills, a remedy for the kidneys only, that has been used in kidney troubles 50 years. You will make no mistake in following this Chestertown citizen's advice.

Mrs. A. A. Sparks, High St., Chestertown, Md., says: I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and they have given highly satisfactory results. I strongly recommend this remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents, Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.
