Makes Plea in Fight to Save Mate

Mrs. Kay Gilbert, wife of Lieut. Leon A. Gilbert, as she appeared at a press conference Tuesday in Washington with attorneys who are helping to save her husband from a death sentence imposed by a field court martial for behavior unbecoming an officer in face of the enemy in Korea. In the group from left to right are Woody Taylor of the AFRO, Judson Fuchs, Mrs. Gilbert's personal attorney of York, Pa.; Mrs. Gilbert and Frank Reeves of the NAACP legal staff.

Judicial Council Asked to Rule Gilbert Innocent

By WOODY L. TAYLOR

WASHINGTON

Counsel for Lt. Leon A. Gilbert, which Army medical board reported that at the time of the offense, Lieutenant Gilbert was so emotionally disturbed and his anxiety was so acute as to make him unable to adhere to the right.

It was also contended by counsel that Lieutenant Gilbert did not receive a fair trial and should have a new one.

In as much as the trial was held within 200 yards of the main line of fighting, any court of law would consider it difficult to determine justice under such circumstances, they contended.

The officer was poorly defended, they also said.

Mr. Reeves, the NAACP counsel active in Lieutenant Gilbert's defense, reports that at the time the officer was awaiting court martial, he (Gilbert) saw over 100 men of both races in the stockade under similar charges.

He was picked over them to be the number one case, the lieutenant stated in a letter to his wife, adding that the Army felt it had to make an example of someone and he was that person.

While no discrimination, per se, is noted, the lawyers outlined the board and long history of discrimination in the U.S. Army.

They argued that inasmuch as the 24th Infantry Regiment is all colored, and the court martial was composed of all - white officers, such implications should have been on the board for consideration.

A letter to Mrs. Gilbert, the officer's wife, from an officer who served as his counsel during his trial, was also introduced into the record as evidence.

The Judicial Counsel will now deliberate its findings and give its opinion, which it will forward, along with that of the Board of Review — which earlier considered the case — to the Judge Advocate General.

He will either concur or not concur and send all of the findings and opinions to the Secretary of the Army, who will submit them to the President of the United States.

If however, the Judicial Counsel finds the courtmartial punishment legally insufficient, they can remand the case for a retrial.

Terrell Law School Broke

Funds Needed at Once to Keep Doors Open

WASHINGTON

The Robert H. Terrell Law School, founded in 1930 by Dean George A. Parker, is facing a grave financial crisis, and unless the more than 275 graduates it has turned out and friends come to its' rescue immediately it will have to close its doors.

Dean Parker affirmed to the AFRO this week that the board of directors, headed by Melvin D. Hildreth, met last week and considered the possibility-of closing the school unless substantial financial assistance is obtained.

Enrollment Drops

The plight of the school was made more acute this fall when a new low in student enrollment, 52, was reached.

Dean Parker said an enrollment of 80 to 85 students is necessary to meet current expenses.

Co-operative Project

Terrell Law School was founded and flourished after the Howard University Law School discontinued its night classes.

It is a co-operative project with a number of the city's leading lawyers contributing their services on the the faculty. Classes are held at night.

Problems Cited

During recent years the grievance and admissions committee of the Bar Association warned officials of Terrell that the school would have to receive accreditation or else its graduates would not be allowed to take the bar examinations.

The accreditation requisites included the maintenance of a full-time faculty of at least three instructors and a law library with at least 10,000 volumes. Terrell complied with both of the requests at considerable expense.

Grads Excel in Exam

While the school was not accredited its graduates now practicing in some 10 states, for several years outnumbered the graduates of Howard's Law School in passing the District bar examination.

The success of Terrell's graduates in the local examination, experts explained, was due to the fact that the school concentrated on the District law problems, while Howard was concerned with the general structure as its students came from all parts of the nation.

The decision as to whether Terrell will continue to operate this fall will probably be reached at the board of directors meeting to be held Nov. 11.

Officer Kills Man Who Injured Him

FARMVILLE, N.C. — Lessie S. Spivey, 25, of Louisburg, was shot and killed instantly by Policeman J. A. Gregory after Spivey shot the officer twice while he was investigating an automobile accident on the highway four miles from here.

The officer was hit by two bullets in the left shoulder and arm as he started to enter the front door of an abandoned farm house where, unknown to him, Spivey was hiding in the kitchen.

Chief of Police L. T. Lucas said he and Policeman Gregory were investigating a wreck near the farm house when they entered to track down a lead on the theft of Gregory's police car a week previously.

The police chief said he had gone around to the back of the house and was about to arrest another suspect who was hiding behind a farm building when Spivey engaged Policeman Gregory in a gun battle. The second suspect escaped.
