Facts Court Ruled Upon Mickey Divorce Case;

Since the testimony in the suit by her mother to establish that Mickey divorced her was given by Attorney Master Herman F. Hillman, of Towson, and his daughter, Mary Mickey, in the father's suit and her mother's counter complaint.

The chancellor has asked for a clarification of the social status of the infant plaintiff, because there never has been a denial of the parentage and custody or the right of support from the father.

Counterclaim Pastor

The question of her social status will have to be resolved from a motion of the counsellor of the defendant, Mary E. Mickey.

"If she is successful in proving that her divorce in Maryland was obtained by fraud, this she is still the legal wife of Harry W. Mickey, and totally any children born of the parties are children born of wedlock.

"If she fails in her proof, then the plaintiff is a child born out of wedlock.

Allegations Not Proved

"I feel that Mary E. Mickey has failed to prove her allegations.

"Statements Not Proved

"In her Maryland suit, when it was stated under oath, and corroborated with an outside witness, that she was a resident of Maryland and entitled to secure a decree of divorce from the courts of that State.

"Under these conditions, that decree is entitled to full faith and credit in our courts until it is proved that it was produced by fraud.

"At this point it may be noted that one lawyer again appeared before the Maryland court and asked the court to vacate its decree because of fraud on her part.

Alleges Fraud

"Instead of doing so, and after a lapse of over three years, she comes into this court and alleges that she committed a fraud on the court of Maryland and asks to be relieved of the result of her own conduct.

"At the time of proceeding, she, in her own person, she stated under oath that she was not a resident of Maryland for the period she testified to under oath in Maryland.

"Therefore in this court, she has shown that her conduct does not be worthy of a decree, when she has proved herself to be guilty.

Gave Wife $7,914

"That her own attorney prepared and prepared a stipulation settling the property rights of the parties.

(Dr. Mickey testified last Spring that he gave his wife $7,000 as a property settlement after giving her $914 to obtain a divorce.)

"The only inference this can be drawn from these payments is that after the wife had commenced her suit, Harry W. Mickey, an indigent and considerate husband, agreed to settle property rights to avoid further demands upon him.

"The case is barren of any evidence of a conspiracy in which the defendant, Harry W. Mickey, participated.

"If, as alleged, Mary E. Mickey committed a willful fraud upon the court of Maryland she cannot be heard to be relieved of the results of her conduct on her own application.

Statements Differ

"In any event, she has sworn in two different courts to entirely contradictory statements of fact, in each instance material to a decision favorable to her.

"In Maryland, she even had the advantage of a corroborating witness.

"This court should not be placed in the position of determining where the truth or falsity lies under these circumstances.

Can't Use Court

"A party will not be permitted to play fast and loose with the court, nor to assume a position in one court entirely different from and inconsistent with that taken by him in another court or proceedings with reference to the very same matter or thing.

"A party may take alternate positions as to certain matters or things but not inconsistent ones with reference to the very same identical matter or thing . . .

Court's Decision

"I am therefore obliged to reach the conclusion that the plaintiff and counter - complainant have failed to carry the burden of proving the material allegations of their complaints, and must therefore dismiss the complaint and counter claim.

"Finding as I do that the parties are not, and were not husband and wife at the time of the conception and birth of the infant plaintiff, the matter of custody and support of the infant plaintiff must be determined by a magistrate or other municipal court."

Cloture Rule Vexes Senate

Four Resolutions Heard in Committee

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON

Two days of hearing last Tuesday and Wednesday on four resolutions to change the existing Senate cloture rule found the Senate Rules Committee face to face with a dilemma.

If one of the resolutions should be favorably reported, the question would be taken to the floor of the Senate, and, if adopted, would have to be brought to a vote.

On the other side of the dilemma is the existing rule, which was invoked by proponents of a change as unconstitutional, tyrannical and impossible of enforcement.

Three 64 Votes

The rules requires a vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership, or 64 votes, to shut off debate on any matter pending before the Senate.

But the "joker" in the rule is a provision exempting from any limitation of debate any motion to take up any proposal to change any existing rule.

Senator Benton admitted during the hearings that he did not see the answer to the problem this exemption proposed. "I think we are going to have to try first to work this out by persuasion, compromise and the reasonableness of the Senate," he said.

Senator Hubert Humphrey (Democ., Minn.) fighting a filibuster against a change in the rules by endurance contest said:

No Way Out

"I refuse to believe that 64 Senators, who are judged in their respective states for civil rights legislation, cannot enact a fair, half as large, to put it very bluntly," he said. "There is no easy way out," he added. "Sometimes we will just have to join the issue."

Senator Leverett Saltonstall (Rep., Mass.) who participated in the Sunday morning conference in 1949 that resulted in a compromise and adoption of the so - called "Wherry rule," the Senate's existing cloture rule, favored similar procedure to accomplish a further change in the rule.

Senator Blair Moody (Dem., Mich.) called attention of the Lehman resolution "a first and urgent step in what might well be a sweeping revision of Senate rules." He said he thought the rules should be such that the Senate could bring any legislation to a vote.

The Lehman resolution provides for adoption of cloture after two days of debate by a majority vote of a Senate quorum present and voting, or by a majority vote after 14 days of debate. It also would close the loophole exempting motions to change the rules from any limitation of debate.

MORSE HINTS AT VOTE SWAP:

GOP Figures Split Over Way to End Filibuster

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — One Republican Senator last Tuesday attached and another defended the so-called "Wherry Rule," designed to cut off filibusters in the Senate.

Sen. William E. Jenner, (Rep., Ind.), appearing before the Senate Rules Committee in behalf of Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry of Nebraska, said the existing cloture rule was a compromise resulting from days of effort by Senator Wherry and others to salvage what they could out of a southern filibuster against the Hayden-Wherry resolution.

The Hayden-Wherry resolution, making cloture applicable to any motion or other matter before the Senate, as well as the "pending measure," provided for adoption of cloture by a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting.

Two-Thirds Vote

Senator Jenner said it was at the Nebraska Senator's insistence that the present hearings are being held on resolutions to change the cloture rule. One of the resolutions provides for adoption of cloture by a two-thirds vote of Senators present and voting.

Senator Jenner said he thinks a two-thirds rule is the "only adequate, practical and safe rule" and is the only one that can be sustained. Sen. Wayne Morse, (Rep., Ore.), charged that adoption of the compromise cloture rule was the result of a "deal" made in the cloak rooms, whereby votes against a bill to construct a northwestern power transmission line were traded for votes for the compromise proposal.

Sen. John C. Stennis, (Dem., Miss.), called on the Oregonian to prove his charges. Morse replied that he would exercise his rights as a Senator to testify before the Rules Committee without the Mississippi Senator telling him how to testify.

Morse told the committee that he thought the Senate should "come to grips with the fundamental reason for the fight to maintain the privilege of the filibuster in the Senate."

Cannot Dodge Issue

"I am satisfied that we in the Congress cannot avoid indefinitely providing economic opportunity on an equal basis for all the people of this country, irrespective of race, creed or color," Morse said. "We cannot continue with a policy of discrimination in this field of civil rights which has come to characterize the mores of America and not do ourselves irreparable damage in foreign relations.

The Morse resolution provides for adoption of cloture by a simple majority vote of Senators present and voting and allows each Senator an hour to speak after cloture has been adopted and gives him the privilege of farming out to other Senators any unused time.

Ives - Lodge Plan

Senator Irving M. Ives, Republican, of New York, appeared before the committee in support of the resolution offered by himself and Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., (Rep., Mass.)

The Ives-Lodge resolution provides for limiting debate by a majority vote of the entire Senate membership.

Philip C. Willcie of Indiana, son of the late Wendell Willkie, testified for cloture in behalf of the American Civil Liberties Union. He called the filibuster "an effective veto by a group of Senators of any piece legislation of which they do not approve."

Threw Kiddies Out Window 3 Floors Down

11 Lived in $23 Week 2½-Room Place; Son Tells Story

By JAMES L. HICKS

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — Irma Randall, 32 - year - old mother of nine children, went to her death in the highest tradition of motherhood Tuesday when she calmly stood in flames on the third floor of her burning tenement house and tossed four of her children to safety below, and then died in a blaze of glory as firemen tried to rescue her.

No soldier on the battlefield ever died more gloriously.

I learned the story of how she died from her nine-year-old son, James, who was the last of the nine children whom Mrs. Randall tossed to safety before she died. Its an old story—a very old story. The age old story of a mother dying that her children might live.

Little James Tells Story

But when young James tells it well listen for yourself.

James had stayed home from school because of a cold while his twin brother, Joseph, had gone on to school as usual. Late in the afternoon Mrs. Randall was cooking dinner for her husband, a truck driver, and James was "taking care" of William, who is five, Michael, who is 3½ and Edward, 18 months.

Suddenly, smoke began to billow up through the walls of the rickety tenement to the third floor where Mr. and Mrs. Randall paid $22 a week for 2½ rooms in which to house 11 members of their family.

Mrs. Randall, the former Irma Moore of Lewiston, N.C., and Portsmouth, Va., gathered her four children around her and rushed to the stairway. Flames were already coming up the stairway. They were trapped.

Herded Sons in Corner

She herded her four young sons into a corner of the room then rushed to a second floor window. Throwing a blanket to a group of men below, she yelled down to the men, "I've got four of my children up here with me. Please catch them in this blanket."

The men quickly formed a net with the blanket and Mrs. Randall disappeared from the second floor ledge as a crowd gathered in the streets below.

What happened inside that burning building then can only be told by James. "Momma came over to where we were in the corner," he said, "and she said to me, 'James, Momma's got to push you and the rest of the kids out of the window. Don't be afraid.'"

The 170 pound, five-feet-four and a half-inch mother then lifted each of her four sons to the ledge of the window as the flames began to lap at her clothing.

First she tossed out 18-month-old Edward, next came Michael, then William. That left only Mrs. Randall and James.

"Get One More"

"Momma looked down and said to the men below: 'I've got one more,' then she said to me, 'Don't be afraid, son, Momma will come right behind you.' Then she pushed me off into the blanket," James concluded.

Mrs. Randall then climbed up on the ledge herself but James had been hurt when he struck the blanket forcing it to the ground, and one of the men feared that the blanket would not hold Mrs. Randall's weight. He called to her to wait until he could get a ladder.

Some say the valiant woman waited, others said she climbed up to jump from the ledge. But even as she stood on the ledge, the cruel flames came up behind her and snuffed out her life leaving her to fall backwards into the inferno. But each of the children had been saved.

Sister Takes Children

James was in pretty good shape as I visited him Wednesday night. Several of his ribs were broken in the fall from the second floor, but otherwise he was all right. Little Michael, Edward and William am seemed none the worse for their experience.

All nine of the children have been taken into the home of Mrs. Maggie Mitchell, oldest sister of the late Mrs. Randall.

Mrs. Mitchell said Mrs. Randall was one of four girls born to their parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Moore of Lewiston, N.C., and Portsmouth, Va.

She said her sister attended I. C. Norcom School in Portsmouth, and was very athletic.

She married at an early age and came to New York where all of her nine children were born with one exception.

Attended Church Regularly

While in Virginia, she frequented the House of Prayer at 1023 County St., and was a regular churchgoer in Brooklyn.

The dead mother is survived by husband and nine children, Samuel, 17, Marjorie, 14, John, 10, James and Joseph, Irma, Michael and Edward; three sisters, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Grace Moore, and Mrs. Beulah Mitchell of 911 E. Olney Road in Norfolk, Va.

As near as can be estimated from the burned out families living in the Quincy St. house where Mrs. Randall and her family lived, there were at least 38 persons living in the two-story house with an improvised attic.

The fire allegedly was started by an oil stove which overturned in the basement.

How Heroic Mother Saved Her Four Children

Scene of blaze in a Brooklyn tenement where heroic mother of nine dropped four of her nine children from third-floor window into a blanket held by neighbors, then collapsed and died on window sill. Photo at left shows remen removing body of 35-year-old Mrs. Irma Randall from building. Broken lines show how she threw children to safety. In right photo, James Randall, one of the children, is carried to waiting ambulance by Patrolman William Connelie and William Seals. James and his three younger brothers were unhurt.

Lee Appointed Head Therapist

WASHINGTON

Josephus Lee, former District Recreation Department playground director, has been named to the post of recreation therapist at the Crownsville (Md.) State Hospital.

Lee, who was appointed in September, heads a mixed staff of 15 workers who supervise the recreation program of some 2,100 convalescent patients about to be discharged.

Wills Appointed

Appointed to the staff recently by Lee was Maurice (Sonny) Wills, former Cardozo three-letter athlete, who completed his first year of organized baseball with the Hornell (N.Y.) Dodgers in September.

Now in his middle thirties, Lee has been active in District athletics since 1930. He has been an umpire since he was in his teens, he said.

He was among the first to officiate in colored Baseball Leagues when the Hilldales were the strongest teams along the Atlantic Seaboard.

Boxing Champion

He attended Hampton Institute from 1923 through 1926, and excelled in football, boxing and baseball. He captained the football team two straight years.

After 10 years in the District Recreation Department, Lee resigned to go into private business. Currently, he conducts a taxi service, and is a life guard at Carr's Beach during the summer.

WOUNDED SIX TIMES:

You Get Religion Fast in Battle, Hero Says

"You may not be a religious man when you go into battle, but when the going gets rough, you get religion fast. . ."

Cpl. Lawrence Grant settled his six-foot frame into a living room chair and proceeded to tell how he was wounded six times during 293 days of hand-to-hand fighting in Korea.

A gunner and tank commander in the 89th Medium Tank Battalion, Cpl. Grant was first wounded on Aug. 18, 1950 when his unit was supporting the hard-pressed 35th Infantry.

Fought All Day

"We had fought all day and all night and were killing them by the hundreds, but they kept coming and swarmed all over our tanks. We caught a blast from a burp gun and was put out of commission," the tall soldier opened his shirt and pointed to battle scars on his chest and arms.

He didn't mention it, but the records show that he received the Bronze Star with a 'V' for valor as a result of that action.

Released from the hospital in September, Grant was wounded twice during that month, once when he stepped on a land mine; and another time by shrapnel.

Wounded Sixth Time

In December, the Baltimore GI got a new high by being wounded three times. Twice he was blinded by smoke fumes, once while rescuing a white comrade from a disabled tank which had been hit by enemy artillery shells.

His sixth wound came late in December. As he tells it:

"I was standing atop the tank as we went through a mountain pass. The enemy had stretched a thin wire across the pass. I was in the lead tank and the gun on the tank snapped the wire, but before I could duck the wire came back and slapped me across the neck and face."

Asked about his most exciting experience, Cpl. Grant replied without hesitation:

"One night we had our tanks lined up awaiting an attack that was expected at 4 the next morning. Somehow, the enemy infiltrated our lines and one of them slipped into the tank I was in.

Tank Invaded

"When we discovered him, the North Korean pulled his gun. There wasn't much room in the tank to fight, but since the guy was nearest to me, I grabbed him and after a tussle, killed him with a razor I had taken from a dead Korean."

A veteran of five years service, the 21-year-old soldier is now stationed at Fort Meade pending assignment to another camp where he will train new soldiers in combat.

Manager Fined $300 for Unsanitary Eatery

Terming it as "one of the worst and most shocking conditions that a restaurant has been found in for sometime," Judge Helen Brown fined Dong Gee, the manager of the Yu Song Restaurant, 531 N. Fremont Ave., $300.

The manager was fined $100 each for three violations of sanitary conditions on Sept. 4, 10 and 17.

James H. Edwards, sanitary inspector, testified that on three occasions he visited the restaurant and found the place in a "deplorable condition." He said the food and premises were infested with roaches and other insects. He and inspector William K. Marsh Jr. found some 20 or 40 pounds of salted meat rotten and infested with larvae.

More than 50 pounds of rice was condemned. It was filthy with hairs of rats, Dr. Emmanuel Kaplan, chief of the Division of Chemistry of the Department of Health, testified. Dr. Kaplan also said that other samples of food taken from the restaurant contained rodent hairs, live larva, and roaches.

Bad Odor in Cellar

Mr. Edwards said a terrible odor was in the cellar where most of the food was found. It was the result of many rotten eggs which Dr. Kaplan called "incubator rejected eggs that can't be bought in stores through the regular food channels."

Gee, the defendant, and his attorney contended that he was not the owner of the building or the proprietor of the restaurant. They claimed the restaurant was owned by another person but that he operated it. Judge Brown asked the defendant, who spoke little English, didn't he understandthat if he was licensed to run the restaurant, he had to keep it in a sanitary condition.

Mr. Edwards said when he visited the restaurant the manager was "belligerent and uncooperative," and would not produce his license when asked.
