few remaining days we are not planning to bring out a new one."

Stevenson then hit like on his FEPC dilly-dallying.

Declaring that he has a "neat formula" on FEPC in which he would have state governors work out the problem, Stevenson recalled that he (Stevenson) had tried to put through an FEPC law as governor of Illinois, only to have a Republican legislature defeat it.

"It isn't always the governor who needs a pep talk," Stevenson said.

Problem Need Attacking

Then launching into the civil rights question, Stevenson said "it cannot be solved by snappy slogans whose only purpose is to dodge the hard issue. It must be attacked by the government at all levels, by private groups and most of all in our own souls."

The crowd sent up a tremendous roar as he completed this part of his speech.

The Harlem rally came as a fitting climax to Stevenson's window campaign for the bid of New York's 45 electoral votes.

There had been great concern aboard his train as to the reception he would get in Harlem following so close on the heels of Eisenhower. It had been feared that attacks aimed at Sparkman's civil rights record and his attempt to get on the civil rights bandwagon might keep the crowd down.

Leaders Get Out Crowd

The meeting was whipped up by Congressman Adam Clayton Powell and Harlem leaders J. Raymond Jones, Hulan Jack, Herbert Bruce, Joseph Pinkney, Willie Bryant, Louis Martin and Joe Louis, although the Stevenson Volunteers gave great support in getting out the crowd.

Mrs. Thurgood Marshall and City Councilman Earl Brown journeyed to Bridgeport, Conn., to ride into town with the governor.

Stevenson's train rolled into the New Haven Railroad's 125th st. station at 10:15, right on time. He was mobbed by a throng who led a torchlight parade to the Theresa. En route thousands lined the sidewalks and jammed into the street from Park ave. to Seventh ave.

Biggest Rally Of Campaign

Reporters aboard the train agreed that the Harlem meeting was far and away the greatest meeting of the entire campaign.

Prior to his meeting in Harlem, Stevenson had campaigned through New England, having in Boston early in morning and stopping ten times in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut for rear platform speeches before large and enthusiastic crowds.

Boce Barlow, attorney of Hartford, boarded the train at Putnam. He said the race in his state would be close, but he thought Stevenson would win.

Small Town Supporters

All through the small New England towns, colored people were scattered in the crowds and in every case where one was interviewed they either expressed confidence that Stevenson would win, or hope that he would win.

Both hope and confidence was expressed by Mrs. James Lockett of 25 Belden st., New London, who told this reporter, "He's going to win. I know. I'm a praying woman and I'm praying for this man."

She said that she is the foster mother of seven children and that she has two of her own that she has raised. "I tell them all," she said, "That the Republicans have never done anything for colored people and never will."

Teachers' Advice Irks

Mrs. Lockett said one of her children had been told at school that Eisenhower was the best man for the country. She said he told his teacher, you'd better not tell my mother, that. I raise them right," she said "I tell them to be good Democrats."

At New Haven, where Stevenson reaffirmed his "get tough" with communism stand, he was greeted by a mixed reception committee which included Dr. Harold S. Fleming, Dr. Roy J. Gilmer, the Rev. Theodore Ledbetter and James Mitchell, community leaders.

Dr. Fleming showed this reporter a copy of an advertisement for which colored citizens paid and had inserted into the New Haven Register, local daily.

"Are Not Duped"

The ad read as follows:

"We are not duped by General Eisenhower, who tardily mouthes liberal phrases in Harlem after having come from the embraces of such Dixiecrats and racists as Byrnes and Byrd in the South.

Sparkman, also a Southerner, has consistently denounced these and other state rights and Dixiecrats; on the other hand, look at the record of Senator Nixon, who has always voted against civil rights and labor.

"We dare not take a chance with General Eisenhower, who refused to integrate our boys in all units of the Army, despite presidential edict. Ask your soldier sons and husbands about this."

Politically Mature

The final paragraph of the ad said:

American colored people, as all Americans, have grown up politically. That's why they are not frightened by racist appeals. That's why we, like Americans generally, will vote for Adlai Stevenson, for we want all what is best for America."

At Bridgeport, Stevenson was greeted by a cheering crowd which included New York City Councilman Earl Brown and Mrs. Thurgood Marshall, who came aboard the train as a part of the New York Volunteers for Stevenson.

Mrs. Marshall reported that Harlem was even then preparing to go all out for the Stevenson meeting.
