Reserve Laundry Unit To Recruit Officers And Men

The 995th QM Laundry Company, a Baltimore unit of the U.S. Army Reserve, is being reactivated after completing some time ago its tour of active duty which began Sept. 11, 1950 when it was called into Federal Service.

Activated in May, 1949, as the 995th QM Service Company, the unit trained regularly at the Army Reserve Armory at 301 N. Fallsway, until it was called to active duty two years ago. Captain W. K. Hahn, its commanding officer at the time, proceeded to Fort Devens, Mass. with four officers and 25 enlisted men.

At Fort Devens, the unit served as a cadre for the training of enlisted men in laundry operations. The unit remained at Fort Devens until it reverted back to an inactive status. During this period most of the members were reassigned to other units, gradually, as others took their posts after training.

Captain Samuel T. Daniels, whose home is at 1516 Payson st., is the present commanding officer of the 995th, while 1st Lt. Samuel W. Beasley, 2305 Rigg ave. is executive officer. Two other officers are assigned to the unit—2nd Lts. Jean Fugett, 2802 Mosher st., and Ernest Stokes, 720 E. 23rd st. There is a vacancy for one commissioned officer.

Recruiting Officer

Captain Daniels and his staff are building the 995th to its full allowance strength of five officers and 40 enlisted men. Two of the latter have already joined the unit—Sgt. Asbury G. Jones, 525 Hawthrone rd., and Cpl. Malcolm C. Weems, 1429 Lanvale st.

Capt. Daniels states that the mission of his outfit is to provide laundry field services to individuals or to reclamation installations, as well as a limited amount of service for the decontamination of clothing and equipment when the unit is attached to a station hospital. The 995th is a semi-mobile outfit, of a type that is generally attached to a headquarters and headquarters battalion.

Some of the advantages of joining a Reserve unit, such as the 995th, are pointed out by Capt. Daniels. For the young men of draft age it gives him an excellent opportunity, even though he only has to attend two evening meetings monthly, of soon being promoted to a non-commissioned officer. This means that if he is called to active duty in the Army he will enter it with the grade he held as a Reservist.

Veterans Benefits Also

To the veterans, it means additional promotional and retirement credits. The non-veteran can join the Reserve at age of 17, and, since Maryland draft boards are not yet calling up men below 20, the young Reservist can go a long way in both his training and grade before he is called upon to enter active duty.

Another advantage is that he receives a full day's pay for each training period. There are two of these held monthly on the evenings of the 2nd and 4th Tuesdays for a period of two hours, and do not interfere with his civilian position.

In addition, the reservist goes to summer field training exercises for 15 days every summer, for which he receives full basic pay, as well as service credits for both promotional and retirement purposes.

Training Also Important

Another important factor is that of the training itself. If interested in laundry work, either as a personal business enterprise or for supervisory capacity, the training given by the 995th QM Laundry Company will prove to be a valuable asset in that this training covers every basic phase of laundry.

Interested parties may contact Captain Daniels at his home, or they may do so with the Quartermaster Corps Instructor, Major David E. Potter, on the third floor of the Fallsway Armory, where the 995th trains, any weekday between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Banquet Honors Bishop And Wife

from the church congregation at the minister's words.

A month ago, the pastor was asked to resign by members of the Deacon and Trustee boards.

Get Court Order

In an effort to thwart his ouster, the Rev. Mr. Banks through Josiah Henry, his lawyer, sought court action to block a church meeting called to vote on the pastor's status.

The meeting was held despite issuance of a show cause order by the Towson Circuit Court. An official vote of church members supported the ouster.

A hearing on the legality of the church meeting will be argued this week in the Towson court.

Last week, the Rev. Mr. Banks called a meeting and at that time, the presiding Deacon and Trustee boards were voted out of office.

Declines Comment

At Sunday's church services, Purlee Jones, chairman of the governing boards, declined comment on the church's internal situation.

The Rev. Mr. Banks, however, said: "It was the regular church meeting, and the Deacons and trustees were voted out by 49 members."

Asked whether all members were notified, the minister retorted "They didn't have to be notified, the annual meeting has been going on for 21 years.

"Its been rumored that they're going to fix it so I can't get another church in the country. They don't know nothing about me, but are trying to shut every door in my face," the pastor lamented.

Injects Hoodoo Angle

The minister also accused someone of trying to "hoodoo him."

"During the week of October 23, the church janitor found about five pounds of salt and pepper sprinkled up the aisles, across my pulpit chair, and into the pastor's office," declared the Rev. Mr. Banks.

He declared an old "voodoo" superstition credits salt and pepper with driving out the devil.

Trip To Virginia

The original dispute between the Rev. Banks and members of his church congregation occured after the minister and members of his Hallelujah Chorus made a pilgrimage to a Virginia church, this summer.

The next day the pastor and church members went to a nearby beach. While there, the Rev. Banks became involved in an argument with a beach patrolman.

The subsequent charges brought by the Trustee Board is an outgrowth of this argument.

Suspended Officer Returned To Duty

Suspension has been lifted against Officer Lawrence Jackson, Northwestern district policeman who was involved in an accident with his private car while on duty last month.

On Friday, following an investigation of the situation, Police Commissioner Ober fined the officer $50, revoked 15 days' leave of absence, and assigned him to night duty for an indefinite period of time.

The officer was also given a warning against any further police department violations.

An Appeal To Prejudice

Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, writing in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post outlines what he thinks may happen if the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws racial segregation in the public schools.

He admits that to knock it out would be to knock the keystone from the arch of segregation, adding that on the manner in which the court disposes of this issue will hinge the future of race relations in the south.

Here is a threat that if the court does tell the states they can no longer jim crow colored children, your life will be placed in jeopardy by the Ku Klux Klan.

This is a thinly-disguised warning to the thirty-25 colored children.

The whole tone of the Dabney article indicates that the Richmond editor and many of his subscribers to quotes are more interested in the preservation of their prejudices than they are in the welfare of the school children.

Dabney Misses The Point

He says nothing about the psychological harm segregation does to both races. He says nothing about the economic waste involved in setting up two sets of schools in every community where one would be more effective and economical.

He says nothing about mixed schools being the means of teaching people to live and work together, to get that elementary contact which will enable them better to know and appreciate each other and therefore better serve their country.

Mr. Dabney does say something about a high school in his own Richmond being better than the white high schools. This is a foolish argument.

We do not count individual schools. Any new school building erected by a city or county might be better than dozens of white schools, but the average colored school in Virginia and the other 16 states which enforce segregation is only 60 per cent as good as the average white school.

Mr. Dabney says it is to be doubted whether the Supreme Court will outlaw others want segregation in the schools eliminated.

He quotes from the survey by Elmer Roper in 1952 which found only 17 per cent of white and colored southerners wanting to see the end of all segregation in the schools.

That poll of Elmer Roper's is meaningless. The answer to a question is determined by the question itself.

The majority of the colored people anywhere want the best for their children. When they are given an honest question fairly and squarely without threat and intimidation they will say so.

Far From The Truth

Some of the more loose-mouthed opponents of civil rights legislation are already sounding off.

They would have you believe that the election of Gov. Stevenson serves as a mandate from the people that there be no federal action in this field.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. Governor Stevenson did not lose because of his forthright position on equal rights.

If that had been the deciding issue, how can it be explained that the Democratic candidate carried such states as Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, North and South Carolina?

It is in these very states where the greatest hostility to the civil rights program originates.

Even when General Eisenhower carried southern states such as Florida, Texas and Oklahoma, the defection of these normal-by Democratic strongholds was not over civil rights.

The dissatisfaction arose over tidelands oil.

The happy circumstance is that the enemies of equality actually have nowhere to go.

The Democratic platform called for an end to the filibuster and before the election a large number of Republican senators pledged to join in this crusade at the beginning of the new session.

Both party platforms called for federal action on FEPC, although the President-elect prefers to move on the state level.

Nothing can be gleaned from the election results which would lead to the belief that the majority of the voters do not want their fellow Americans to share fully the opportunities as well as the responsibilities of citizenship.

Tales Of Two Cities

Two quaint Southern stories made the headlines last week.

In Yanceyville, N.C., an all-white jury for the second time convicted 45-year-old Mack Ingram for looking at a girl from a distance of 75 feet.

In North Carolina if the man is colored and the girl is white that's a charge of assault. The judge gave Ingram six months in prison and then suspended it.

Ingram, through his counsel, announced that he would appeal. We believe this to be a wise decision.

Why should North Carolina be allowed to get away with this fraud upon justice even if it is sugar-coated with a suspended sentence?

Down in Tupelo, white Mississippians who are calloused to colored citizens being mistreated by night-riding bullies, awoke with a shock to find these thugs had widened the scope of their activities to take in white people.

Newell Anderson, a North Dakota-born circulation man for the Tupelo Journal, was forced to take his wife and flee for his life. The mayor of Tupelo, shocked by the news, asserted, "Tupelo doesn't stand for this sort of prejudice."

Of course the mayor is in error. Had official Tupelo not been so complacent when the bigots whetted their appetites on helpless colored citizens, the city would not now be embarrassed by what has happened to its white residents.

It's Still Waiting There, Ike

Every day that passes without the adoption of a fair and effective program to end the discrimination against the colored people in the south, the Republicans will be more and more convinced that the Democratic party is not willing to do the job.

Ike's failure to make good on his promise
