TREAT YOUR SEED WHEAT FOR SMUT

Insure Clean Seed By Killing the Spores Of Stinking Smut With Formalin.

NICKOLAS SCHMITZ.
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

When a field of smutted wheat is threshed, many of the "smut balls" are broken and the sound grains are covered with the smut dust. As far as is known, this is practically the only way infection takes place to any serious extent. This infection is especially serious when a clean crop is threshed with a machine that has just threshed a smutted crop.

Before treating your wheat for stinking smut, it is best to remove all unbroken smut balls. Since the smut balls are much lighter than the sound grain, thorough fanning will generally do this. If fanning will not do it, the grain should be poured into a barrel of cold water and thoroughly stirred so that all the smut balls will come to the surface where they can be skimmed off.

SPRINKLING WITH FORMALIN.

Buy from your druggist 40 per cent. solution of formaldehyde or formalin. Pour one pint into 40 or 50 gallons of water and mix thoroughly. Put the grain to be treated in a basket or in a sack, one half bushel at a time, and plunge the grain into basket or sack containing the grain into the solution until every grain is thoroughly wet. Then raise the sack or basket for a minute to allow the solution to drain back. Next place the sacks where they will drain completely, or dump the grain out in a pile. Cover the pile with sacks or canvas, and allow it to remain in this way for 12 hours or more. Then the grain should be spread out on a clean floor to dry. This amount of solution should be sufficient for treating 40 to 50 bushels of wheat.

A good plan is to treat the seed in the evening and let it lay in the covered pile until morning. About one gallon of the solution will be required for every bushel of grain. Another method is to sprinkle the solution on instead of immersing the grain. According to this method the seed should be spread out thinly over a floor and the solution applied with a sprinkling can or with a spray pump, throwing a fine spray. While the solution is being applied, the grain should be stirred constantly with a hoe, shovel, or garden rake, until every grain is thoroughly wet, about three quarts of the solution to the bushel will be required. After the grain is thoroughly wet, it may be put in a pile, and allowed to remain this way for the same length of time as stated above.

Treated seed may be sown the following day after it has been spread out to dry, or it may be thoroughly dried and kept indefinitely. If sown soon after treatment, the drill should be set to sow from one-fourth to one-third more than for a normal seeding of thoroughly dry seed.

Maryland school teachers from four counties, Montgomery, Prince George's, Charles and St. Mary's will have an excellent opportunity to get in close touch with conditions at the State Agricultural College during the coming week, when their institute from Sept. 7th to 11th, will be held under the direction of the State Board of Education. This is the third event of a very busy summer at the Agricultural College, the first being a six weeks' course for rural school teachers extending through July, and the second being the three days' conference for Rural Ministers which was held there early in August. The Agricultural College is setting a good example in making our State educational institutions and their equipment of use to the people of the State every month in the year.

"Maryland Week" is the designation given the week of November 16-21, 1914, when the Maryland State Horticultural Society, Maryland Crop Improvement Association, Maryland State Dairymen's Association, and the Maryland Beekeepers' Association will hold their annual exhibition in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md.

PROTECT THE WILD FOWLS.

A recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post contained an excellent article in defence of the wild fowl law. For the benefit of our sportsmen we reprent a portion of it:

"From all quarters of the country, until midsummer of this the first year following the enactment of the Federal law protecting migratory wild fowl, reports have come of an extraordinary increase in the number of fowl breeding south of the international line.

"From New Jersey to Oregon, from the edges of two of the Great Lakes, and from many valleys of the interior, observers report that more ducks were seen last spring and this summer than has been the case for very many years. The birds did not migrate, but, finding themselves safe, simply stayed and set up housekeeping, as once they used to do, before the spring shooters drove them out.

"It is astonishing how quickly wild creatures learn when and where they are safe. Perhaps we humans would develop a like cunning if our lives depended on it. The buffaloes and elks and sheep and antelopes in Yellowstone Park would be exterminated if they did not know—roughly at least—the extent of their zones of safety. The bears of Yellowstone Park will come and eat from your hand. The bears of the Alaska Peninsula, for thousand miles deeper in the wilderness, will run twenty miles if they catch the scent of man. One region is a refuge and the other is not; there is the difference and there is the lesson.

"The hay-fed elks of Jackson's Hole in wintertime are as tame as domestic animals. Out in Ouray, Colorado, a band of more than seventy wild bighorn sheep come into the streets every winter and are fed every day. They are almost as tame as domestic sheep. They know where they are safe. Perhaps you have noticed that most wild ducks will sheer off just out of gunshot. Leave a marsh unshot for one year and the ducks have to learn that habit all over again. Give game half a chance and it will increase beyond all present conception of that term. It is in the fact of this actual increase that the Weeks-McLean Law finds its real proving. It is confidently believed by many thinking sportsmen that these facts will very soon wipe out most of the opposition to the law—or at least all opposition except that of men who shoot hoggishly or shoot for profit.

"Let the ducks alone and, like Little Bo-Peep's sheep, they will come home, bringing their tails behind them; and the men who thought spring shooting was their only hope will presently find autumn shooting better than they have known in all their lives. And the sharp days of autumn are the natural ones for shooting wild fowl. Spring does not appeal to most men as a shooting season.

AN APPROPRIATION ALMOST LOST.

The opposition to the excellent Federal law, without doubt or question, gained volume and acquired confidence by reason of the dilatory action of the Goverment officials who had the enforcement of the law in charge. That duty was intrusted to the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture.

"It is true there was not an unlimited fund at their disposal, but there was enough to do something. The course pursued allowed the impression to creep out that the department felt unsafe about the law and did not care to try to enforce it. That impression, once allowed to get out, spread like wildfire. It gave courage to the insurgent shooters. They rapidly organized, began to flood their representatives in Congress with importunities, and, in short, made a bitter fight than was made by the men having the law's dignity in their own keeping.

"The result of this was that when the fifty thousand dollar appropriation measure came up last May it ran close to a defeat at one time.

"Soon after the Senate had passed the big appropriation the character of the press comment became such that the administrasion of this law was taken out of the hands of the Department of Agriculture and placed in that of the Department of Justice. This was yet another good step in the right direction.

"Assistant Attorney-General Jesse C. Adkins, at that time wrote a letter which may be quoted here:

"'I take the liberty of writing to you in connection with the enforcement of the recent Federal law regulating the killing of migratory and insectivorous birds. It had been intended originally to have the enforcement of the law administered by the Department of Agriculture; but as that department has not been able to report any violations, and many complaints of breaches of the law have reached this department, it has been concluded to authorize the United States attorneys to prosecute any case brought to their attention where the evidence appears to be sufficient to justify such a course . . . I should also be pleased, if you think it proper, to have your association call to the attention of the United States attorneys any cases which seem to you of a character deserving prosecution.'

"The aforegoing should afford food for thought among the insurgents who insist on shooting in the spring. The law is now in the hands of the Department of Justice of the United States. The man who violates it takes his own chances, and those chances are very considerable. Morever, though not very many prosecutions have been made—a larger total than might be supposed—evidence is in the hands of officials in Washington that will result in conviction in very many other cases later on. United States deputies have passed through large parts of the Mississippi Valley without their identity being suspected, and they have quietly picked up a lot of evidence and filed it away for later use.

"Give the birds a chance and they will give you more shooting in the autumn than you have had in the spring; and this is true, no matter what district of this country may be yours. It is not the case that this is a class law passed in the interest of the few or of the wealthy, or of those who can travel for sport. It is a law passed after long deliberation; and it is intended for the greatest good to the greatest number. Above all, it is a law passed for the benefit of the birds themselves."
