EPIDEMIC AMONG CATTLE

State Veterinarian Reports Hoof-and-Mouth Diseases.

That an epidemic of mouth and hoof disease has broken out among the cattle on a number of farms near Hagerstown, is the statement of State Veterinary Surgeon, Dr. L. Hickman, who spent Tuesday on the farms on which the affected cattle have been discovered. He quarantined them, besides instructing the farmers as to the isolation of cattle not yet infected.

Dr. Hickman was notified of the discovery of a suspicious disease among the cattle on one of the farms near Leitersburg, Washington county, by C. E. Poe, one of the veterinarians of Hagerstown, and at once left for that place early Tuesday morning. In all he visited nine farms at Lietersburg, Hagerstown, Cavetown, Smithburg and Boomsboro and discovered 177 cases of the disease. On one farm alone he found that 17 out of 37 cows had been infected. He quarantined all the cattle and gave the farmers orders not to sell any of the milk from the cows affected, unless it was carefully sterlized.
