THE ELECTION AND THE PRESIDENT.

Result Shown to be a Wilson Triumph and an Emphatic Vote of Confidence.

[From the New York World].

The disposition of our Republican friends to exaggerate some of the minor details of the recent election may be attributed to pardonable enthusiasm, but even that is not an excuse for downright misrepresentation. In spite of Democratic reverses in many States, there is absolutely no reason to believe that the country is committed anew to McKinleyism, Hannaism and Aldrichism.

"Mr. Wilson's defeat in the second year of his term," says the Tribune, "is as crushing for all practical purposes as were the midterm defeats that overtook President Taft in 1910 or President Harrison in 1890." This is an error, appearing elsewhere as if by concert, that should not be unchallenged.

When Mr. Harrison took office in 1889 there was a Republican House of Representatives. Two years later, the McKinley bill having become a law, he was confronted by a House having a Democratic majority of 94.

When Mr. Taft took office in 1909 there was a Republican House of Representatives. Two years later, the Payne-Aldrich betrayal having taken place meantime, he met a House having a Democratic majority of 66.

In both of these cases the people administered an emphatic rebuke to the President and his party. They did more than express displeasure. They did all that they could do to reverse them and their policies.

Mr. Wilson took office in 1913 with a Democratic Senate and House. As the principal result of the recent elections nationally, he will have during the latter half of his term the co-operation of a Senate with an increased majority and a House with a Democratic majority of at least 20.

We do not believe that the Tribune itself will say again that this is "a defeat as crushing for all practical purposes" as the defeats that overtook Presidents Harrison and Taft.

There is a purpose, of course, in these attempts to dispose of Woodrow Wilson. If it can be made to appear that he was "crushed" in 1914, the real job that must be undertaken in 1916 may be made easier. To this end it is noticeable that such Republican encouragement as was derived from local Democratic reverses has resulted in a country-wide chorus of calamity, panic and hard times.

This is also baseless. There is nothing, in fact, to justify it. The American people never were so rich and prosperous as they are to-day. There never was a time in their history when their Government was more just. No man lives who has seen so many popular demands enacted into law by a dozen Congresses as now appear accomplished on the records of the Sixty-Third Congress.

Taking the greed and graft out of the tariff and financial absolutism out of Wall street has not necessarily closed a single factory. It has not necessarily deprived a single man of work. It has interfered with the business of no one whose trade has not been bottomed on extortion and plunder. We have not been flooded with "pauper goods" from abroad. We are disturbed only as all civilization is disturbed. Such commercial and industrial difficulties as appear are due to war, and nothing but war. Pintocracy, showing some symptoms of recovery, cannot believe the facts.

That the people who not long ago repudiated a party which sold tariff schedules for campaign contributions appreciate these truths is proved by the complexion of the new Congress. It is not to be denied that the Democratic majority in that body will be smaller than that which appears in the present Congress, but it is to be noted very seriously that the new majority represents a Democratic victory over a Republican party once more acting in essential harmony, whereas the great and useless majority elected in 1912 was due in large part to the schisms of Republicans.

In Great Britian a responsible Ministry appealing to the people that gained a majority in the House of Commons like that which is revealed in the Sixty-fourth Congress would regard it as an emphatic vote of confidence. The Administration of President Wilson has received an emphatic vote of confidence, and no falsehood can obscure the fact. Assured of public support, it should face the future with courage and confidence. Its past, at least is secure.
