START WORK IN YOUR ORCHARD NOW.

Prune Your Trees Carefully and Remove All Dead Or Unnecessary Branches.

S. B. SHAW,
Maryland Agricultural College Extension Service.

Begin planning now for next season's fruit crop. Every effort put forth at this time means more fruit of better quality next fall. Many of the trees need to be pruned. A sharp, wide-set hand saw and a good hand pruning shear will greatly facilitate this work. In removing branches from the main limbs or body of the tree, make a smooth, clean cut without leaving any stub. If the cut surface is over an inch in diameter, apply a coat of paint to protect the wound until it has become covered with a natural growth of bark. Any color of any brand will do, so long as it accomplishes the purpose for which it is applied.

A WELL-GROWN TREE.

Cut out all cracked, split and broken limbs. Take out all dead or dying branches and remove any dried up fruits that may be still hanging to the twigs. All such wood and fruit should be taken from the orchard and burned. Dead wood and mummied fruit harbor insects and disease spores. The destruction of this source of infection now, will materially aid in the development of clean, sound fruit later in the year. As far as possible, notice the relative position the main limbs will occupy when loaded with fruit and see if any crossing can be eliminated. At the same time consider what excess of leaf producing wood can be removed to prevent too much shading of the fruit during the summer. Fruit will not develop fully in the shade. Take out water sprouts and open up the head sufficiently to allow of a free circulation of air through the tree and the exposure of as much fruit as possible to direct sunlight.

Head back judiciously. Heavy pruning tends to promote new growth. In some instances it may be necessary to stimulate the development of new wood. Trees that seem to be lacking in vigor, that are apparently not making much headway, can often be rejuvenated and brought into thrifty condition by severe cutting. As a rule, however, it is advisable to remove only about one-fourth to one-third of the new wood from young trees making a normal growth. This applies principally to such trees as apple and pear that produce fruit buds on old wood. With the peach, conditions are different. Here the fruit buds are developed on new wood, hence it may be profitable to cut back these trees more severely so as to stimulate a heavier growth of annual wood.

RULES TO OBSERVE IN DEVELOPING A PARCEL POST TRADE.

L. B. FLOHR,
U. S. Office of Markets, before the Maryland State Grange, Dec. 16, 1914.

One of the biggest difficulties in undertaking to develop or build up a market by parcel-post is to find your customer. As the old darkey's recipe for chicken pot-pie ran "First get your chicken," so parcel-post marketing is contingent upon first getting your customer. The impression first made with your customer largely determines the continuance of the business, and right here, I might as well speak of quality. If would hold him, don't try to market anything you would not be willing to use yourself. Study the wants and desires of your customer and supply him with what he wants and is willing to pay for. If after studying this matter over and perhaps after making a trial, you decide that it is too much bother, I would then say to you, "If you are not willing to hustle for a better market than you now enjoy, don't kick about the returns you receive." The only way to secure business is to go after it, and once you have it keep it by all proper means.

The great success of the Week's Short Course in Domestic Science at the Agricultural College last winter was due in a large measure to the charming and effective way in which Mrs. C. M. Foulke, lecturer from the Ohio State University, handled her commonplace, everyday subjects.

Her talks on "The Kitchen" and "The Cuts and Uses of Meat," were filled with practical helpfulness for the farm woman; or, for that matter, any home maker at all who is interested in lessening her drudgery or in adding attractiveness to her home. The same course with added features is being offered again to Maryland women for the week, beginning January 11, 1915.
