Gadding with the USA

By Lulu Jones Garrett

CUPIDOODLING

In Baltimore, Friday at six, petit Ruth Taylor (she's the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh W. Taylor of the Monumental City) and Ellsworth L. Wilson exchanged vows in the manse of the Rev. Marion Bascombe of Douglas Memorial church.

The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Franklin C. Fulton and Ellsworth C. Wilson, a Boston University grad and is now with the Defense Department, Washington, as a research analytic specialist in languages. He's, too, the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Watkins of Baltimore.

The bride was particularly cute in a pale blue beaded suit, white veiled hat and a shoulder of orchids. Lillie Rice attended. Charles Hawkins was best man. They're honeymooning in New York. Will live in Baltimore.

And speaking of Baltimore doings, Thelma Shipley, town school marm, began proceedings to divorce Ralph Shipley last week. I suppose towards consummating the more-or-less formal announcement she made two months back of her engagement to James Allison.

MONTHLY CRAMPS . . . CHANGE OF LIFE

Ollie Stewart Takes A Look At The New Paris Fashions

By OLLIE STEWART

PARIS — Two special new styles have been created in Paris this spring and are attracting more attention than the majority of the creations being offered at the moment. These two specials are known as "Les femmes fleurs"—or the female flowers.

The one by Christian Dior is absolutely new and interesting, and is called "Tulip Bust." By using enlargening lines from the waistline up, this gives the waist itself an extreme smallness. Enlarged round shoulders, giving over into the sleeves, make the look of an open tulip complete!

The skirt is small here, but in other models wide skirts are shown. Spots in black and white green and gray, and other colors, are often used.

Tulip Like Bust

Balenciaga's "Bust Liane" is almost like the tulip, but in a way softer, richer floating as it drapes around the waistline. Printed silks, styled cut flowers are used here. The skirt is full, falling in soft lines down to the hem, where they swing out wide.

While Dior's belt rests in the normal place, Balenciaga's belt starts at the point where the normal waistline ends, goes smoothly around like a band (ribbon) between waistline and highest point of the hips. The belt is black, and so are the gloves and hat but which is of fine straw with a wide brim and flat top.

Wide Neckline

Another big name, Jacques Fath, has a cocktail dress in white with black dots. This one has the same decollete tendency (see illustration), a draped top, with an extremely wide tulip neckline, and something extra special, a black velvet inside, which shows but is not a part of the dress! An all around pleated skirt gives the whole creation a rich look.

Jacques Fath's ensemble in jersey, "Air France," has a very pure line. Straight dress, marked line down from neckline opens not many inches above the hemline in a pleat. The jacket is straight also, and has one line of buttons in front. The pockets are small and the sleeves are three-quarters.

Lined Jackets

The most interesting thing here is the lining of the jacket —which is in spotted silk. This, together with a little silk scarf (same spotted material) knotted around the neck, gives a finished and elegant look.

The same idea, matching lining in coats and jackets, like the dress and blouse worn with it, is used by smart women in Paris this spring. Not absolutely new, but it may be just the smart touch you need for your ensemble.

Another Jacques Fath creation features the small dress, tulip neckline, black and white with the same material in the coat, has a pink lining which shows when you walk. With this goes a pink hat. Very chic.

Decollete Suits

Remarkable also are the decollete suits. The neckline is wider, round, en carre (square) or ends in a point between the breast. Since Fath (Dior also) emphasizes the bosom this season, the point of this neckline is usually very deep. It is even more so in the dresses, so the hrs would have to have a deep line too, so as not to be exposed.

Remembering that this is Coronation year, you often see very youthful lines, more feminine lines, and very graceful lines in the new creations. Your black, navy blue and gray dresses, your suits and your coats, can all be brought up to date with collars, cuffs and ribbons, of white linen, white gloves and a little white hat.

Rich Evening Gowns

Evening gowns all have one thing in common: The are richly embroidered and very festive. Heavy lace is worn very often, and diadems and flowers in the air accentuate the Coronation motif. Next week some hat styles.

Fashion Model

Miss Frances Wallace of New York, models attractive white wool dress and flowered white hat. Photo was taken Sunday at Martinique Club fashion show held at the Bruce st. clubhouse in Baltimore. Proceeds of the affair went to Provident Hospital. Hats for the show were by Ira Fleming also of New York.
