OPPOSES AMERICAN WAY:

Joey's diner still fighting 'eat anywhere decision'

WASHINGTON

Many die - hard restaurateurs are trying some under - handed methods to beat the Supreme Court decision interpreted by the AFRO as meaning "eat anywhere."

During the AFRO Home and Food Demonstration show last week, one diner closed shop. There had been a sudden flow of colored business streaming from the Uline Arena to his dinner.

The decision to close the business was probably hastened when two reporters visited the restaurant and found that tax patronage was apparently resented.

Went In Joey's

It all began when Fred Leigh, AFRO writer, and this reporter, wandered into Joey's diner, located at 1211 Third st., ne, and tried to place an order with the waitress.

Our blonde friend informed Mr. Leigh that any service forthcoming would be given to us by the manager, J. B. McClure.

"Will you wait on us?" Mr. Leigh asked Mr. McClure with his best manners bursting out all over.

But Mr. McCluse wasn't having any. He wouldn't talk and he wouldn't look around.

Hear No Evil

When he packed so close we could have freeloaded on him, I shouted loud enough to burst his eardrum, "Does this mean that you don't want to serve us?"

He whispered something that sounded like the word, "no."

So then Mr. Leigh wanted him to be more specific.

"Don't you wait on colored people?" he said. Hear no evil didn't say anything.

Well, Mr. Leigh and I had a conference and decided to move into the blonde waitress's territory. When we had settled ourselves at her counter, she whispered to the customer seated next to me, "Don't you want to move?"

We Were Alone

He moved. Mr. Leigh and I couldn't have been more isolated than two pieces of poison ivy.

So we decided to liven up the joint with a little company.

I dashed down to the Uline arena and placed a call to Nonpine precinct and reported the incident.

"You'll have to place a complaint with the corporation counsel's office and swear out a warrant," I was told.

"Do I gotta?" I wanted to know. "I'm hungry now."

"Yes, you do, that's the correct procedure." Private Gerard said. There followed an argument over procedure, which I lost.

Let's Go?

Then I remembered that the Uline Arena was literally running over with cops who had been assigned to cover the cooking school. So, one by one, I called them: "Will you come and go with me?"

One said that he couldn't go because he hadn't been assigned to that territory. (It was one-half block down the street).

Another said that he just knew that Joey's always served colored people because he'd seen them eat in there.

That's What I Believe

Still another said that this was a misdemeanor, since it had already happened, and he wasn't on the scene when it did happen.

At my invitation to accompany me and witness the refusal for himself (Mr. Leigh was still sitting unserved at the diner), the officer declined, saying he believed it would be proper for me to go to the corporation counsel.

His famous last words were, "I still believe it's a misdemeanor."

Well, I trudged back to the diner to see what was happening and to report to Mr. Leigh —who had by now been sitting for one hour waiting for food— that I had not been able to get a bluecoat in town.

However, all was not lost.

Ulysses Prince 3rd, another reporter, had succeeded in gathering quite a collection of policemen around him in front of the Uline after my departure. And Mr. Leigh and I had a clear view of the aggregation through the glass walls of Joey's diner.

But the cops still weren't moving and Mr. Prince was busy taking all of their badge numbers.

Told Sergeant

So, this time, I went back and talked to a sergeant who seemed to be riled about something.

"Tell me what's happening," he said. So I told him. His name was Sgt. Francis Davis of No. 9 precinct.

He and another officer, Pvt. T. J. Kelly, accompanied Mr. Prince and me to the diner and we walged in to see Mr. Leigh with a glass of water and cup of coffee. The manager was also busy fixing him a hamburger.

"Why, this man has been served," Sergeant Davis said.

Mr. Leigh explained that the manager had been looking at the group of officers and the two reporters through the glass and had started serving him when we started moving in the direction of the diner.

Nothing He Could Do

Sergeant Davis talked to the manager and asked him if he understood the effects of the Supreme Court decision. However, he told us there was nothing he could do because Mr. Leigh had been served.

Incidentally, as soon as I sat down on the stool to rest, the manager asked for my order and gave me a glass of water.

Then the policemen left.

So Mr. Leigh and I amused ourselves with conversation about all the colored lines we were going to have waiting to get lunch the next day at this fabulous joint.

But although we passed the word around, we were never able to keep our promise.

Next day, Joey's diner was closed.

Panama editor gets country's top award

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) —Panamanian Ambassador Roberto Heurtematte has presented the Vasco Nunez de Balboa award to George W. Westerman, Panamanian newspaper man, author and sociologist.

The award was made to Mr. Westerman for his work for better interracial relations in the Republic. A similar decoration is to be presented to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt by President José A. Remon of Panama during his current visit to the United States.

Lawyers deny being 'subversive'

WASHINGTON (ANP) — Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell recently received a protest from the National Lawyers Guild against his recent statement that it is a "subversive" organization.

The guild's notice protested and denied any charge or insinuation that it is a Communist, Communist-dominated or Communist-controlled group. The organization claimed that it is an "independent association of attorneys dedicated to the welfare of the American people and bar, and to the American traditions of freedom, democratic government and justice and equality for all."

In addition to its denial of the attorney general's charge, the guild notice of extent denied his legal authority to make any such listing as he proposes, asserting that the discretion accorded the attorney general to label organizations as "subversive" because of the ideas they express "would enable him to define what is patriotic and proper in the area of thought, speech and association."

The notice also challenged the term, "subversive," as wholly undefined. The notice adds that since this standard is subject to grave abuse, it has no place in our legal system. Pointing out that the attorney general, who under a presidential executive order, is authorized to list organizations, has already announced his decision regarding the guild in a speech at a public meeting, the notice asserts:

"If due process requires nothing else, it requires a consideration after a fair hearing and confirmation of judgment previously made.

Referring to the attorney general's action in publicly citing the guild, the notice said it is "subversive" the fact that it has defended the constitutional rights of Communists, the guild notice asserts that he has thereby "increased immeasurably the already depletable reluctance of lawyers to undertake the defense of Communists, making a mockery of the resolution of the American Bar Association "urging lawyers to discharge the bar's duty of defending the unpopular and the despised."

Cardozo needs nine teachers

WASHINGTON

Cardozo high school with an enrollment of 1,983 pupils needs nine teachers to bring the pupil-teacher ration to the standard of 25 to 1.

Robert N. Mattingly, principal of Cardozo, told the AFRO that he has 70 teachers.

In order not to have any classes uncovered, Mr. Mattingly explained, several were overloaded with pupils. Some classes with as high as 40 individuals.

In other instances teachers are teaching an entire class.

However, Mr. Mattingly revealed there are five physical education classes for girls and four physical education classes for boys without instructors.

To meet this situation, pupils are sent to study halls during physical education periods.

The Cardozo principal asserted that he has been promised three teachers to meet this shortage.
