SANDY BOTTOM DEPARTMENT STORE!

WE HAVE A REASON.

The following "editorialette" appeared in the Beck organ last Saturday:

"To be serious, now, no man has yet a reason to say that John Walter Smith is not a friend to every individual living in the territory which he represents, no matter what his occupation. He has never lost an opportunity to further the interest of his people, and it will take more than the word of such moulders of public opinion (?) as the Anti scribe to change his record."

There are a number of good and sufficient reasons why neither the farmer nor the man on a small salary, or any one for that reason should say that Senator John Walter Smith has been their friend:

1—His influence in the last session of the Maryland Legislature created a deficiency in the State Treasury of $1,000,000 by the passage of laws providing for numerous appointments for his friends among whom are Lewin W. Wickes on a salary of $6,000 a year, Wm. W. Beck appointed to a job of $1,500 a year and J. Arthur Bradley, Mr. Beck's brother-in-law, an $1,800 job. This enormous deficit the people of the State of Maryland will have to pay in greatly increased State taxes. Do you call that friendly?

2—Many a young man struggling on a small salary is endeavoring to save enough money through the Building Loan Association to build himself a home. Senator John Walter Smith stood at the threshold of the young man's ambition and with an amendment to the Republican protective tariff on lumber he put an additional tax of $2.50 upon every thousand feet of lumber that would go into that young man's home. Senator Smith is a lumber baron. Let any young man who has any stock in the building loan sit down and figure on the cost of his cosy little home that he has in his mind to build or buy some day, and let him add $2.50 to every thousand feet of lumber that goes into that home as a toll to go into Senator Smith's pocket, and he will learn to his sorrow how friendly Senator Smith has been to his financial and social welfare.

3—We sat in a farmer's grange meeting during the session of the last Legislature and we listened to an eloquent appeal by one of Kent county's most prominent farmers to support from his fellows to a resolution to the Legislature asking for the establishment of a State lime manufacturing plant that would enable the farmers to secure their lime at a lower price per bushel than they can buy it from the lime trust. That resolution was heartily adopted and a fight was started in the Maryland Legislature for the passage of a bill providing for such a plant. No sooner had Senator Smith heard of the move than he went to Annapolis and put his foot down on the movement, and the bill never saw daylight. Do you call that friendly to the farmers' interests?

4. For years the shippers of this State have been endeavoring to secure the federal inspection of grain at the port of Baltimore. The farmers and shippers have felt for years that they have not been receiving a square deal and they started a movement to secure the passage of a bill in Congress providing for such inspection. As soon as the matter came up in the United States Senate, Senator Smith took off his coat and fought like a Trojan against the farmers and shippers interests, and the farmers are still struggling against the injustice. Do you call this friendly to the shipping interests?

5—When the senatorial election was held last fall the career of Senator John Walter Smith had so disgusted the Democratic voters of the State that scarcely one-half of the vote turned out, and instead of carrying the State by 40,000 as his friends claimed he beat Carrington by a measly 15,000 votes.

These are good and sufficient reasons why the Democrats of the State should refuse to vote for Smith's man, Harrington, for Governor.

HUBBARD GLACIER

Alaska's Gigantic Frozen River as It Meets the Sea.

THE MOTHER OF ICEBERGS.

Rumblings and Roarings That Come as the Masses of Ice Break Away From the Face of the Lofty Cliff to Start on Their Ocean Voyages.

The birth of an iceberg is strikingly described in a report made to the National Geographic society by R. S. Tarr and Lawrence Martin, who headed the expeditions of the society to Alaska for the study of the behavior of glaciers there.

"The front of the Hubbard glacier, measured in a straight line, is three and one-half to four miles wide. But since the ice cliff has a sinuous form with projections in the center it is in reality much longer than this, the total length being between four and one-half and five miles. This cliff rises between 250 and 300 feet above the water and extends an unknown distance below it.

"One usually needs to wait but a few moments to hear from some part of the cliff the thunder-like rumble or roar which is the first announcement of an iceberg's fall, followed a few moments later by the appearance of a great swell, which on reaching the shore forms a line of white breakers even at a distance of several miles from the ice cliff.

"By watching the ice cliff one may see the huge masses fall from the ice front and a fountain of water dash perhaps even to the top of the glacier and then in a few seconds hear the report which the rending of the glacier sends out.

"One is fascinated by the performance. Sometimes it is only a small piece that falls, and then a sharp single report like the crack of a pistol goes through the air; again a part of the front crumbles and the downsliding ice, broken into small pieces, seems from a distance like a fountain of water, while the report is only a low rumble; at other times huge masses break away, forming large icebergs, and the noise then produced is like the heavy rumble of distant thunder, and at rare intervals one may see a huge mass of blue or black ice thrust itself up from below the fiord, some distance from the glacier front, as a part of the submerged ice foot is broken off, and then no report is heard, but the wave that follows is far greater than usual.

"The water waves which follow the discharge of icebergs from the front of Hubbard glacier are of great magnitude. In September, 1913, for example, the big steamship Princess Maquinna was aground on a reef just west of Oster island with the members of the international geological congress, who visited Yakutat bay under the guidance of the junior author. The ship lay somewhat over a mile from the glacier, and yet the water wave following the discharge of icebergs from Hubbard glacier caused the steamer to roll until she took in water on the main deck as first one side and then the other was tipped far down by the iceberg waves.

"There are periods when for an hour or two there is very little discharge and then periods, fully as long, when scarcely a moment elapses without the sound of icefalls from some part of the glacier front. It is possible that these differences are in some way related to the state of the tide, but we have not determined whether the periods of quiet and activity form part of a regular cycle or are merely irregular intervals due to accumulation of strain and relief from strain or to expansion and contraction under sunlight.

"While there are periods of relative quiet, they are not periods of absolute repose, and they occupy far less time than the periods of activity. Day and night the ice falls, and the reports that pass out through the air are so frequent that it is fair to speak of the glacier as almost ceaselessly active. The noise disturbs one's sleep at first, and sometimes, when an unusually heavy fall occurs, wakens one even after he has grown accustomed to the ordinary rumble. A sense of nervous relief is felt when camp is removed to a part of the fiord to which the iceberg roar and the breakers on the coast do not reach."

True Devotion.

Little Katharine had a big dog which she loved dearly. One cold night she asked if the dog could come into the house for awhile. Her mother said:

"Yes, but as soon as he begins to scratch you must put him right out."

Later Katharine was heard to exclaim:

"Oh, Bertie, don't scratch; tell me where it itches, and I'll scratch it for you."—Chicago Tribune.

Voltaire's Quick Wit.

When Voltaire was living in London a crowd gathered to mob him as he passed along the street. For what reason? Because he was a Frenchman. Boldly confronting the mob, he mounted a stone and addressed them. "Brave Englishmen," he cried, "am I not sufficiently unhappy in not having been born among you?" This speech was so effective that the crowd carried him on their shoulders to his lodgings.

His Comparison.

"When you eat be careful to leave off hungry," is advice that is very often given to children at the dinner table, but seldom received in an obedient spirit.

The caution was repeated not long since to a youngster of vigorous appetite.

"Pshaw!" he said. "You might as well tell me to wash my face and be careful to leave off dirty."

A Feminine Failing.

"Sometimes my little girl says she is eight; at other times she says she is six. I don't understand it; there must be something wrong with her."

"I wouldn't worry. I know plenty of older females who can do no better."—Kansas City Journal.

The Telephone Gets You There First

The lines of the Bell telephone system extend like a network over the state and country. There is a Bell talk-train ready to start whenever you are—whether it be a call to somebody in your home town or in another part of the United States.

Often a call by telephone will gain admittance for you where a call in person would be fruitless. Bell lines reach everywhere and rates for out-of-town talks are reasonable.
