—Armory site

cated that another location was being considered.

In effort to seek reconsideration of the original plans, a resolution was introduced and a hearing held at which over 300 persons appeared to state their views.

'Displaced Persons'

At this hearing, W. A. C. Hughes Jr., attorney, led the fight for the protestants, claiming that the affected tenants in the area would become "displaced persons in Baltimore."

Members of two white organizations, the Mt. Royal Association and the Residential Protective Association, however, maintained that the armory site is an ideal location because it will add to the redevelopment of the blighted area.

Later the resolution was passed through the city council.

Though the federal agency has indicated that it may pay two-thirds of the net cost for cleaning the slums in the area, the Board of Public Works has to decide whether the state can foot its share of the bill.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council, Monday, Clark S. Hobbs, chairman of the Redevelopment Commission, estimated that the state may have to pay $2,279,903.

Costs Too Much

Governor McKeldin, in an earlier statement, said this is more than he wants to pay for the land as it would leave only $7,720,097, of the $10,000 granted for the proposal, to construct the buildings.

Other locations still under consideration are:

The undeveloped state-owned property in the vicinity of Montebello State hospital, property on Greed Spring ave., adjacent to the Children's Hospital School;

Also, the property located about four miles north of the central business section of the city and the St. Mary's Industrial School on Wilkens ave.

Budget-conscious householders extol the merits of natural gas heating
Budget-conscious householders today are extolling the merits of natural gas heat.
Not only do they find a natural gas system economical, but serviceable, dependable, clean and almost entirely trouble free.
Satisfied, smug and snug homeowners in all sections of the city and in the suburbs are emphasizing that low cost is one of the most advantageous features of gas heating.
Typical testimonials from homeowners who spend an average of only $8 to $12 per month during the 8-month heating period are these:
"Natural gas is the most economical of fuels. I have used all types. Gas heat is clean and trouble-free."
"Gas heat is the finest money can buy. It costs me less than my previous fuel."
"I like gas for its convenience and its economy."
Eliminates Problems
"Gas heat gives me an even heat and warms my home quickly. It is clean, dependable and eliminates delivery problems."
Thrifty Investment
Gas-burning home heating equipment is economical to buy and economic to install. It is a thrifty investment, not only from the standpoint of low fuel costs, but there are no hidden expenses.
There are no extra motors to operate, no expensive maintenance, no need for periodic servicing and no need for annual cleaning.
So make the changeover to natural gas heat immediately then sit back in calm, cozy comfort and enjoy the holidays.
